Naval Plans Changed By World Flight

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26.—President Coolidge has decided for the time that he will not ask of Congress an appropriation for the elevation of the guns on battleships. It was indicated at the White House today that the President was influenced in his decision by the advancement in air fighting and the success of the all around world flight.

That the President is revolving in his mind whether the battleship has become obsolete, to some extent, as a capital fighting agency through the progress in airplane fighting was suggested by the spokesman for the President today.

Wilbur's Speech Not Wise

In view of this situation, what appropriations shall be asked for naval craft and aviation, it was said, impelled the President to hurriedly summon Secretary of the Navy Wilbur from California for a conference on the naval budget. While this was given as the chief cause for the President sending a dispatch to Mr. Wilbur to return to Washington at once, it is known that some of the things in Secretary Wilbur's speeches were not regarded as wise. The President acted without consulting officials in the Navy Department and, therefore, his action is believed to have some bearing upon the character of speeches that Mr. Wilbur was making, especially his references to the Japanese question and the building of a big navy for Pacific coast defensive purposes.

At the White House today it was said that President Coolidge himself had summoned his head of the Navy Department and it was intimated that a discussion on the budget was one reason why he had asked him to return before completing his speech-making tour.

Elevation of Guns.

His answer to a question today as to the gun elevation controversy led the President into a general discussion of the navy situation. He reiterated that while not intending to ask for an appropriation for the elevation of the navy guns, this Government would not abandon its rights under the treaty, but was merely guided by policy. This policy, it was said, was to do nothing which would encourage competitive building or make the navies of the world expend additional money on armament as the result of an American action.

The success of the world fight has impressed the President so greatly with aviation as to make him doubtful as to future heavy expenditures for battleships, it was said. He himself, has reached no decision as to whether the battleship holds the same place as an effective fighting force as it did in the world war, due to the great advancemen in aviation since the war. He said that suggestions have been made to him that aviation has progressed so rapidly since the war, as evidenced by the world flight, that experts are now divided as to which agency holds first place in naval warfare.

Duke of Norfolk, 15, Is Richest Boy, With 85 Millions

LONDON, Sept. 26.—The richest boy in Great Britain is the little fifteen-year old Duke of Norfolk. He is soon to learn exactly how wealthy he is. Although his father, the late Duke, died seven years ago, the task of proving the will and valuing the estate is just being completed. His fortune is expected to total about $85,000,000.

The estate comprises about 50,000 acres of land and includes Arundel Castle in Sussex and Derwent Hall in Derbyshire, with Beech Hall in Sheffield and Norfolk House St. James Square, London. The London house was rented during the last season here by Mrs. Harry Brown of Pittsburgh. Some of the land has been sold since the Duke died.

The Norfolk family stands next to blood royal and is at the head of the English peerage. The Duke is the hereditary Earl Marshal of England. Earl Marshall of England. In that capacity the late Duke officiated at the coronation of Edward VII ,and of the present King. The little Duke can look forward to acting in a similar capacity when the Prince of Wales is crowned King.

The Duke's mother is Baroness Herries in her own right and is therefore one of the peeresses eligible to sit in the House of Lords if the fight initiated by Viscountess Rhondda for the admission of peeresses to that assembly is won.

Canon Premier's Friend

British labor, not content with political power, has now invaded the inmost stronghold of the Church of England, and this week it was announced here that Canon Frederick Lewis Donaldson of Peterborough, noted Socialist churchman, has been appointed to the vacant canonry at Westminster Abbey.

Though such appointments are made in the name of the King, the nominations come from the government and Canon Donaldson has long been a close friend of Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald. It was he who organized the memorial to MacDonald last year congratulating him on the increased labor representation in the House of Commons.

The memorial was signed by more than 500 clergy of the Anglican and Scottish Episcopal Churches. Early this year the vacant deanery of Carlisle was offered the Canon and in refusing it he said: 'No doubt due regard will be paid by the Prime Minister to the many clergymen who have been in the forefront of social reform and labor politics during the past twenty five years.".

Canon Donaldson first came into prominence in 1905 as Vicar of St Mark's at Leicester, when he headed the march of the unemployed from Leicester to London and back. He took his out of work flock to Lambeth Palace here and rang the doorbell. Then he invited the Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the Church of England to come out and shake hands with the men.

St. Mark's at that time was regarded as a sort of labor cathedral. In the interior, pictures of workmen in rough clothes replaced those of saints and martyrs and several large panels behind the altars were filled with paintings setting for the evils and possible cures for modern industrialism.

Describing these, Canon Donaldson said: "Labor is seen carrying massive material and some unseen weight without hope or expectation of reward and with bowed head and back. No face can be discerned looking upward, but all seem absorbed in the mere burden of existence. In the foreground is the figure of a fallen man, symbolizing Labor overwhelmed by its burdens. The quiet, watchful figure above represents Mammon, oblivious to all but his personal aggrandizement. Bags of money are on his lap and grim callousness to pain is around him and expressed on his countenance."

The Canon was one of the founders of the Church Socialist League took the side of the Suffragettes during the pre-war struggles and has lectured much in the cause of social reform. Among the dictums of his regarding poor people of the church are the following:

"It is not so much for the poor to hear the church's message as for the church to hear theirs."

"We must realize that the poor are the church."

AN ALBINO COBRA BEAUTIFUL BUT DEADLY

A pure white cobra snake nearly six feet long was recently added to the Zoo in London, England. This exhibit is unique as an Albino cobra has never been heard of before. It is a creature so strange, beautiful and deadly that it might serve as the living idol of some mystic cult. It is a pure albino—the scales all over the body white like glossy china, the eyes and tongue scarlet, as the absence of pigment allows the red blood to shine through. Like all cobras, when excited it rears the fore part of its body vertically from the ground, and by flattening and expanding the sides of the neck displays the "hood" while it slowly sways the head and neck, hissing fiercely. The snake shows a pale brown shade on the hood but this is not due to pigmentation of the scales. This albino was probably to the horny composition of the scales. The poison fangs have not been accidentally found near Delhi, India. The poison fangs have not been removed, and the owner, unless he has a natural or acquired resistance to cobra poison, was both rash and fortunate. He took the snake to the Zoo in a small basket, handled it freely allowing it to creep around his neck and to strike at his ear and hand, although drops of its deadly venom were dripping from the fangs. The cobra bites with a chewing movement inflicting a number of small wounds. The venom is exceedingly dangerous, and fatal accidents have occurred by the careless use of a towel on which it has been discharged. Those who know most about these venomous serpents treat them with great respect as their bite proves fatal almost inevitably.

APPLE ROSETTES

Make a baking powder biscuit dough of two cups of flour, three tablespoons of lard or other shortening worked in with the finger tips, half a teaspoon of salt, three teaspoons of baking powder, and milk to make a douggh that can be rolled. Roll in an oblong about one-fourth inch thick, brush with melted butter, and spread over it a cupful or coarsely chopped apple which has been mixed with half a teaspoonful of cinnamon and half a cup of sugar, roll the long way, and cut into inch sections. Place these cut side up, closely together, but with the side brushed with melted butter, in a well oiled pan, lay a bit of butter on top of each, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon, and bake in a hot oven until brown. Eat with butter or whipped cream.
