Youth Rallies In Two Worlds

LONDON (Reuters)—Two great world youth rallies are due to take place simultaneously next month—in Britain and Russia.

While 35,000 boy scouts representing 85 nations stream into Britain, about 1,630 young people from Britain will set out to join 30,000 others at the World Festival of Youth in Moscow.

Nearly 130 nations—according to organizers in Britain—will be represented in the Moscow festival, branded by the British government as an international Communist propaganda vehicle. A group of Canadians will attend.

Snubbed by many Western youth and sports organizations, the Moscow rally will be held from July 28 to Aug. 11.

The World Scout Jamboree begins at Birmingham Aug. 1 and ends Aug. 12.

The British World Youth Festival Committee, making the arrangements in Britain for the Moscow festival, said the Russian gathering was not being held in competition with the scout get-together.

But a spokesman for the Boy Scouts Association said the association believes there is "more than a coincidence" that the festival is being held at the same time as the jamboree.

BEDTIME STORIES

Black Pussy Investigators

"Finding out things often pays in very unexpected ways."
—Black Pussy.

Black Pussy the Cat yawned and stretched. It was so early in the morning that no one else was awake in Farmer Brown's house. Black Pussy yawned and stretched again. He had had a good sleep He decided that he would go outside and perhaps do a litte hunting. It was not really light yet but that didn't matter. In fact he was rather glad that it wasn't really light for he has eyes for seeing in the dark. He knew that some of the Mouse folk and Rat folk are out and about through the night, and sleep or keep in hiding through the day. There might be a chance to get one before it became too light. When it did begin to get light the bird folk were usually out looking for an early breakfast. It would be fun to catch one.

"Now what is the matter with Goldie and Mrs. Goldie?"

It wasn't that Black Pussy needed a Mouse or a Rat or a Bird for breakfast. He didn't. In fact he wasn't hungry. Like many men and boys he likes to hunt. He thinks hunting is fun. Perhaps he wouldn't think it was fun if ever he had been hunted himself. He always has plenty to eat without the trouble of hunting for his food. Black Pussy never has to go hungry. Perhaps some of those he hunts know this and it is why they hate him when they don't really hate some others who hunt them. They know they are being hunted for needed food, not for fun. With these, life becomes a contest of wits and the smartest lives.

Once more Black Pussy yawned and stretched. Then he went to the small open door which was his very own and in warm weather always open for him to go out and in when he pleased. Outside the Black Shadows were beginning to hurry away to the Purple Hills behind which to spend the day. It was still quite dark over in the Green Forest but not so dark in the Old Orchard and in the open dooryard not dark at all. Black Pussy went over among the bushes along the old stone wall on one side of the Old Orchard. More than once he had caught a Mouse there. Often there was a chance to catch a bird there. There were plenty of places in which to get out of sight and lie in wait. Black Pussy has the patience of a true hunter. He doesn't mind waiting a long time. He did just that this morning. It grew lighter. The birds began to waken. Some of them began to call. Two or three with the sweetest voices began to sing. Black Pussy kept still and listened. Only the tip of his tail moved. It twitched now and then. It sometimes seems as if that tail acts of itself and Black Pussy does not even know it is twitching.

It became still lighter. Suddenly there was a great screaming over in the big elm tree in the dooryard.

"Now what is the matter with Goldie and Mrs. Goldie," thought Black Pussy. "They sound anxious and they sound angry. I wonder if Sammy Jay or Blacky the Crow has been trying to steal their eggs. I can't think of anyone else who can get up to that nest."

He listened for a moment or two without moving. Then he heard other birds of the Old Orchard screaming and knew by the sounds that they were flying over to the big elm tree. They sounded almost as excited and angry as Goldie and Mrs. Goldie.

"This is something to find out about," thought Blacky Pussy. "When a lot of birds are as excited as those birds seem to be they are likely to forget everything but what is exciting them, and grow careless." He ran toward the big elm tree, but he did not forget to keep under cover as much as possible.

Is Sharply Critical Of French-Canadian Thought

By WILLIAM STEWART
Canadian Press Staff Writer

MONTREAL (CP)—The concept of a "habitant" Quebec, held too long in Quebec itself, has been a serious handicap to French-Canadian development, says a history professor at the University of Montreal.

Prof. Michel Brunet comes to this conclusion in a sharply-critical and possibly controversial study of French-Canadian thought since the British conquest of New France in 1759.

He says French Canada's thought pattern has been rural, anti - state and messianic. These three "dominants" have misdirected the peope of French-Canada and it is urgent they achieve a careful new idea of their place in a modern industrial society full of material benefits.

NOTABLE COLLECTION

Prof. Brunet, 39-year-old writer on Canadian historical subjects, presents his study in the third volume of Ecrits du Canada Francais, a collection of French-Canadian contemporary writing. The first of the collections, published by a group of Montreal intellec-

The historian says that an examination of trends of thought, while the most difficult kind of history, is essential to French-Canadians if they are to find their proper place in a province abounding in material wealth over which they yet have little control.

He says Quebecers are minorty shareholders in their territory's industrial machine because their guidance, particularly in the last half of the 19th century, was toward a rural way of life proclaimed to be not only their mission but their salvation.

With this developed a mistrust of their civil administration which would have served them much better.

Prof. Brunet goes bact to the plight of the population of colonial New France at the time of the conquest. He declared that, contary to general belief today, this population was not primarily land-loving but busy with exploration, trade, commerce, industry, engineering, military service and government. It was a progressive society providing keen competition to Spanish and English colonization of the period.

HEALTHY COLONIZERS

The French colony counted 40 millionaires and reports from the administration going back to France referred to a lack of interest in agriculture.

Prof. Brunet says the habitant way of life was forced on French-Canadians as a means of subsistence after the conquest. Hundreds of Canadian-born citizens emigrated to France, to the West Indies and to New Orleans. They represented one third of the governing class. Those of the elite who remained behind were reduced to secondary activities.

What happened amounted to "decapitation" of the colonial society and those unable to find refuge outside the colony were part of a population adrift.

The rural cult was the gradual result. It was fostered by the clergy, whose own field of action had been drastically restricted, and by educators, writers and French-Canadian civil leaders.

THE GREAT IDEAL

Prof. Brunet says rural life became the great ideal. Its faults were hailed as virtues. French-Canadians who finally left Quebec seeking to better themselves in the United States often were branded "traitors."

Meanwhile English - speaking people launched profitable commercial and industrial enterprises and took control of business in French-Canada.

The writer discusses the position of the clergy, wary at first of the British regime that dealt strictly with them; alarmed later by loud-spoken French-Canadian nationalists who seemed to endanger what liberties the clergy had won; and finally profoundly influential while the influence of civil leaders suffered.

Pro. Brunet says a general suspicion on civil administrators spread through French - Canada whose people failed to take advantage of the major fact that Confederation, little more than a century ater the conquest, gave them their own autonomous provincial government.

He says the Quebec government could have been put to work immediately to help French-Canadians match the industrial and commercial activity of English-speaking business men.

ANTI-STATE PROPAGANDA

But by then the French Canadian idea, developed within parish boundaries, was of a reduced role for the state because political thought was incomplete and there was no tradition of government.

Prof. Brunet says the propaganda directed against the state and its representatives prevented French-Canada from acquiring a true political conscience.

He blames the immorality of Quebec elections not on lack of moral standards but absence of political education.

Today, says Prof. Brunet, rural-minded thinkers are fighting a thinning rearguard action though vestiges of their influence remain.

He says his people's educators and intellectuals must consider French-speaking Canadians as inhabitants of a wealthy land to whose development they must contribute and from whose resources they can become well-to-do masters of an urban society.

Whoopers Are Still Thriving

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Another day passes and two awkward chicks—growing fast and changing color faster — set another world record.

The chicks are Audubon Park Zoo's baby whooping cranes. Thursday the older of the two is 55 days old, the other 52 days. No other whooper born n captvty has lived longer than 46 days.

George Douglass, the overjoyed zoo superintendent, appears confident the rare birds will grow to maturity. He says they are in top health, the younger one 44 inches high, the other 41 inches.

When fully grown, cranes reach about five feet in height. The world has less than 30 of the white birds with black under wings and red-tipped heads.

The chicks, born all rust-brown, have developed their black wings and white is sprouting through the brown here and there. In another four or five months they should be ready to fly.

KEEP AT ZOO

Douglass says the birds will not be placed in the flock that winters in Texas and summers in western Canada: "Our birds are too tame, they are too used to buildings. Instead of flying north they might stop on top of a barn, where someone could easily shoot them." The baby whoppers will be used to bring more rare whoopers into the world.

Opening lead—four of hearts.

South, close to an opening bid of his own, showed his strength by jumping to two notrump, which North properly raised to game.

East played the jack of hearts on the first trick and when it held, continued with the ace and another heart. South won, led a diamond to the king and a low diamond back, intending to let West win the trick. When East produced the queen, South took the ace and returned a diamond. Unluckily, East had the jack, ran his hearts, and South was down one.

South should have played the hand differently. East's opening bid had pretty well marked the location of the missing high cards. In addition to his heart suit, the king of spades and probably the Q-J of diamonds could be delegated to East.

Declarer could see 27 high card points in dummy's hand and his own. It was not too much to expect that East would have the missing 13 points. All that remained to be done was to put this knowledge to use.

Since East had the burden of guarding both spades and diamonds as well as his hearts, the clubs should be cashed at once, the purpose being to compel discards from East.

Accordingly, after winning the third round of hearts, declarer cashes the K-Q of clubs and leads a low diamond to the king. The A-J of clubs are taken. East parts with a spade on the ace, but what can he discard on the jack?

Obviously, he cannot throw a diamond. If he discards another spade, blanking his king, South can cash three spade tricks and make four notrump.

East will presumably, therefore, discard a heart. But as soon as he does this the sting is gone. The threat of defeat vanishes. Declarer simply plays the jack of spades from dummy, allowing East to take his king and the solitary heart he has left.

The total losses consist of a spade and three hearts. By cashing his clubs first, South squeezes East out of one trick.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
