BRAIN OF LEADER SLICED FOR STUDY

MOSCOW, ec. 17. — Twenty-five thousand microscopeic slices were made yesterday of the brain of Nikolai Lenin, father of Communism, for study by the Soviet Brain Institute.

The institute, founded in 1927, has 180 adult, 300 child and 470 animal brains under study. Results will be used for making a "brain atlas" to serve educational and scientific purposes.

Lenin died in January 1924. His embalmed body is still preserved in a mausoleum in Red Square, where it is on view.

Soviet scientists are making a close study of the brains of unusual persons and types, hoping to throw more light on behavior. It is customary for any Russian leader or thinker to will his brain to the institute.

EXCHANGE FIRE PERILS FORTUNE IN DIAMONDS

NEW YORK, Dec. 17. — Millions of dollars in diamonds were threatened yesterday by a fire in the cramped, unostentatious building in the Bowery housing New York's famous diamond exchange.

Several battalions of firemen poured tons of water on the building, limiting damage to around $15,000 and saving the jewels from damage.

Two score diamond dealers, all nervous and some wringing their hands, were herded by police into a nearby building and placed under guard to prevent them dashing into the exchange to save their jewelry

CHAPTER 28

No one seemed able to move.

Mrs. Simms' wide open gray eyes fastened on Sugar's face as she told her story.

"When Mr. Langworthy said he would take my home and put my poor husband and children out without a roof over their heads, I hated him. In all my life I had never done a wicked thing. I knew I could not appeal to his hard heart. So I told him I would take the baby and leave it on the steps of the orphanage.

"But when I went back up to the attic and saw the poor little thing lying there so tiny and helpless, I couldn't do it. I thought of its poor mother downstairs, probably dying without the care of a doctor, and I couldn't bear to take the only thing she had to live for from her."

The old nurse shuddered violently, as if with a nervous chill. Mother Friddle was afraid to speak even a word of encouragement for fear she would break the spell and Mrs. Simms would collapse. Not a muscle in Jane Lee's face quivered. Her brown, pain-dulled eyes did not move from the narrator's face. Sugar, too, seemed spellbound.

Mrs. Simms wet her lips, and continued in a flat, lifeless monotone.

"That night I went into the nursery downstairs to take care of the Langworthy baby. When I picked it up I was startled by the resemblance between the two children. They were like twins. Both had red hair and blue eyes. Even their size was so close no one could tell the difference by just picking them up.

"It was just like a voice had whispered in my ear and told me to take Mr. Langworthy's baby to the orphanage instead of the Peters baby. I hated him so much that I didn't seem to think there was any wrong in it at the time. He deserved it. All his life he would live in the same house with the daughter of the bank robber from the orphanage, and he would think the child was his own."

Sugar pressed her hands to her breasts to still the wild beating of her heart. But no one interrupted. Mrs. Simms' hands fluttered in her lap.

"Mr. Langworthy had driven to town and wasn't back yet. No one was in the house but Mrs. Peters and Mrs. Langworthy and me. I picked the baby up and hurried to the attic and put it beside the little girl in the crib. They were as alike as two peas in a pod.

"Then I picked the Peters baby up and took it downstairs. When Mr. Langworthy came home and went in to see his child I almost fainted for fear he would know the difference when he picked the baby up. But he didn't. Then I knew what I was going to do. He asked me if everything was ready to take the baby away and I said yes.

"At four o'clock in the morning I sneaked out with his baby. He was waiting for me down the road so no one would hear us drive away. There was a road nobody ever used that went through the woods. No one saw us from the time we left the farm until we got back. He waited for me in the grove by the orphanage while I put the baby on the steps. I stayed two weeks longer and took care of the Peters baby. Then he gave me the $5000 and I left. That wasthe last time I have seen or heard anything about the children until now."

Mrs. Simms raised her hand in a solemn oath:

"As God is my judge I am telling the truth."

Then she fell back in her chair. All life seemed to have left her.

"I believe you," Mother Friddle said quietly. "Sugar, dear, will you get Mrs. Simms a glass of water and put a cold cloth on her head? She seems ill."

Mother knew it was best for Sugar to have something to do. She seemed too stunned for action, but she got up woodenly and crossed to the bathroom.

Jane Lee had not moved from her position among the pillows. When Mother went over to her bed she realized that she had fainted again. The shock had been too great for her. The old maid went out to find Eurasia and tell her to get the doctor. Jane Lee must have medical attention.

When she returned Sugar was on her knees by the old nurse's chair bathing her face.

"Take Mrs. Simms to the bedroom across the hall." Mother took command of the situation. "We'll have the doctor take a look at her too. You must rest here, at least for the night, Mrs. Simms. You've been under a terrible strain."

The nurse tried to get up, but fell back into her chair. It took Sugar and Mother both to get her into the bed. Miss Friddle hurried back to Jane Lee and left the nurse in Sugar's care.

It was strange, Sugar thought as her senses began coming back to her, that she could not hate the woman. She had stolen her from her home and taken her to an orphanage to grow up unknown and unwanted. But in Sugar's heart there was nothing but pity.

Tenderly she bathed the old woman's face and stroked her thin wrists. After a long time her color began coming back, and she opened her eyes.

"You're good," she said wearily. "Why don't you hate me?"

Sugar shook her head pitingly.

"You—didn't mean to do wrong. You must never think I hate you. If it hadn't been me it would have been Zanie Lou who went to the orphanage. It doesn't matter—now."

The woman closed her eyes again.

"You are Zanie Lou. Your name is Zanie Lou Langworthy."

Sugar's head whirled dizzily as she realized that was the truth. Why—Zanie Lou wasn't Zanie Lou at all. She, Sugar Friddle, was Zanie Lou. She asked breathlessly:

"What was the other baby's name, Mrs. Simms? Do you know "

"Patsy Ann. Patsy Ann Peters. Her mother named her the night before she was born. She wanted a little girl."

"It's a lovely name," Sugar said, repeating it to herself. "Patsy Ann. If my sister will let me, I want to be called Patsy Ann. We can't ask Zanie to give the name back after all these years."

She had called Jane Lee sister. An hour before she had called her mother. In all the world, Sugar thought, there could never be a stranger story. But surely it must be about at an end. Nothing else could happen. Gently she stroked the old nurse's head.

"What was my mother, Mrs. Langworthy like?" she asked then, and felt that she could never learn enough about her.

"She was the sweetest woman that ever lived." Mrs. Simms smiled for the first time. "You should be proud to be her daughter."

Then Sugar remembered the big oil painting of a lovely dark ringleted lady in crinoline in the library downstairs. Zanie Lou had said it was her mother. But it was her own dear little mother. Sugar realized with a singing in her heart that almost drowned the misery of the dreadful days she had been through.

She was almost a princess after all, Sugar thought, as she remembered the story she had built up in her childish imagination. Anway, she was the daughter of one of the wealthiest an doldest families in the State of Virginia.

But there was one thing Sugar would be most thankful for to the longest day she lived: that Cart had loved her as Sugar Friddle. And that he had asked her to marry him when she was a little nobody, in her cell in the county jail.

It had been Sugar he loved, not Zanie Lou Langworthy, the heiress. She raised her head proudly.

"Riled" By Radio Advertising Of U. S. Stations

(A. P. by Guardian's Special Wire)

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Dec. 16—George H. Payne, Federal Communications Commissioner, said today that people in South America are "riled" by the character of advertising in United States short wave broadcasts.

Payne, in an address prepared for delivery at the University of Syracuse, said many Government officials were "concerned" because of it.

"Fortunately," he said, "this disagreeable situation is about to be cleared up by the Government itself utilizing the five channels which were placed at its disposal at the conference held at Montevideo in 1932.

"I am sure that any reasonable-minded person will admit that while we may not be unwilling to have blatant and objectionable stuff pumped into our homes over the radio, we haven't the right to inflict the same stuff on the people in the homes of a friendly and unoffending foreign nation."

He explained that the 21 nations of the Pan-American Union had adopted a resolution calling for Government short-wave stations to promote "better understanding" among the American republics.

Date of Latin Poet's Birth In Dispute

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

EDMONTON, Dec. 16. — Latin scholars the world over who observed the 2000th anniversary of the birth of the poet Horace last Monday are slightly off in their calculations according to Prof. J. W. Campbell of the University of Alberta.

Horace was born Dec. 8, 1999 years ago and not 2000 years ago, stated the Professor.

The reason for the miscalculation lies in the fact that from the year one B.. C. to the year one A. D. only one year elapses. Thus there are only 365 days between Jan. 1 in the year one B. C. and the year one A. D. The mistake is based on the fact that those in charge of commemoration of Horace's birth did not realize there is no year "0".

Any person familiar with the calendar system will realize the error, said Prof. Campbell, who is connected with the university mathematics department.

Aged President Names Successor

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

PRAHA, Dec. 16. — Dr. Thomas Garrigue Masaryk, aged first president of the Czechoslovakia republic, resigned at an impressive ceremony here Saturday and recommended as his successor Dr. Edward Benes, Foreign Secretary and for many years a leading figure in the League of Nations.

Dr. Masaryk, whose travels made him well known to a number of Canadians through extensive visits to the western provinces and Ontario is 85. Advancing years compelled his resignation and a new president will be elected next Wednesday.

Sleeping Boy Is "Human Echo"

(A. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

HAWKSHEAD, Lancashire, England, Dec. 16. — The mystery of seven-year-old Frank Atkinson, who "vibrates" when he sleeps and whose body produces strange "knockings," has been solved — in principle at least.

Through some unknown physiological process, doctors said they had determined, the boy, while asleep, becomes a "human echo" and reproduces a noise created anywhere near him.

His parents, however, Dr. W. E. Allen, a local physician, said today, still cling to the belief their son is the victim of some unworldly power. They refuse to consent that the boy be placed in the care of a specialist.

"I am convinced that an abnormal nervous system is responsible for the weird sounds apparently emanating from the boy's abdomen," Dr. Allen said. "Tests with the boy sleeping in a neighbor's home had no variant results."

For some time the story of the boy has brought talk of ghosts and of supernatural powers. To soothe public fears Dr. Allen with several policemen, made an investigation.

"When anyone taps on the wall," the doctor reported, "there is a sound from Frank's abdomen. I do not know whether the noise comes from the stomach or the intestines. The number of noises produced always corresponds with the knocks on the wall.

"The whole thing is uncanny. I found that there was no reaction if I held part of the boy's body. I tapped four times near him while holding his hand. I released the hand and tapped another four times. Frank produced eight noises.

"When he makes these noises his whole body and the bed he is lying on, shake with vibration."

SUN NOT NEEDED FOR MAKING HAY

LONDON, Dec. 17—The old idea of making hay while the sun shines is outmoded by an invention at present being demonstrated by a Newcastle firm. It is claimed that the invention is capable of drying wet grass in ten minutes and turning it out fresh green and still retaining its high proportions of nutrients and chemicals. Wet grass is automatically fed into the machine and dried at a rate of not less than three tons a day.

Grain may be dried by the same process, thus enabling the farmer to reap his harvest regardless of the weather. Costs are stated to be low.

Republican Convention For Cleveland

(A. P. by Guardian's Special Wire)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16—Cleveland, scene of GOP conclave that nominated Calvin Coolidge in 1924, today emerged victor in a three-cornered race for the 1936 Republican national convention.

Producing a certified cheque for $150,000 to help pay expenses of the meeting, the Lake Erie City advocates won over Chicago and Kansas City on the first ballot taken by the party's national committee.

The convention will open on June 9 and the delegates will select a platform and a candidate, who almost certainly will find President Roosevelt his chief opponent in the campaign.

Superfluous Digits Of Family Removed

KEWANET, Ill., Dec. 13—(A.P.)—The Ketterman family was doing well today after losing 11 superfluous fingers and toes in a session of mass orthopedy. Dr. Hugh L. Cooper, Peoria surgeon who amputated the extra digits, told about it yesterday.

Cecil Ketterman, Wyoming, Ill., farmer, and four young daughters went to the Kewanee Elks Club clinic Thursday. They had extra finger and toe trouble. Dr. Cooper gave them local anesthetics and removed tl following:

Mr. Ketterman —One teo.

Betty Ketterman, 10—Two fingers and one toe.

Nola, eight—One toe and one finger.

Kathleen, six —Two toes and two fingers.

Lucille, 14 —One finger.

A subsequent inventory showed that each had left exactly 10 fingers and 10 toes.

Revolutionary Changes In Money System

(C P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

NAPIER, New Zealand, Dec .17—R. Semple, Minister of Public Works in the New Zealand Labor government, in a speech today forecast "revolutionary changes" on the existing monetary system.

Semple said the monetary system of New Zealand must "receive the serious consideration of the government in the near future." He said the people would have to receive the benefit of the nation's credit.

The Public Works Minister described this as "a big job which would make for revolutionary changes."

After the Labor's victory in the General Eleciton last month, the incoming Prime Minister, Michael J. Savage said "there will be no increase in the exchange rate." He said the rate between Britain and New Zealand would gradually be reduced.

A Coming Poetess

The following reference from the Vancouver Sun will be of interest to many close relatives and friends in this Province as Miss McLeod's father is Mr. William McLeod, who was born at Orwell Cove, P.E.I., before going west. The article is from the Sun Ray Club corner, which has 60,000 members and is conducted by "Uncle Ben" and reads as follows:

Lately there have appeared on our page many poems by eleven-year-old Winona McLeod, a smart little nut-brown maiden living at Coghlan, B.C. Some of these poems you may remember were Moon Winks, At Night, March, Smiling Through, My Birthday and A Sunset.

Sometime ago we asked Winona to send us her picture and it has finally arrived in company with the latest rhyme entitled "After the Shower" which she composed on the spur of the moment:

After the rain,
After the shower,
When raindrops are sparkling on every flower,
Mother Nature chases
The grey clouds away,
Then in the sky
The sunbeams play.

All her ideas are formed like that, and we pay tribute to Winona for being so smart as to commit them to paper before they disappear.

Her first poem was Moon Winks, which she began last December and finished a few months ago. . . . But poetry is not the only subject in which she excells. She generally comes first in her school examinations. She attained an average of 91.4 per cent for her work. That's saying a great deal, don't you think? I would have died of heart failure if my name had been called out in class as having made 90 marks in anything. Most of mine were 'corrections.'"

Says Canadian War Memorial Outstanding

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

TORONTO, Dec. 16.—The Canadian war memorial monument on Vimy Ridge is "the most outstanding" on the Western Front, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, former Canadian High Commissioner to Great Britain, said today. Mr. Ferguson returned from London over the week-end. He saw the monument on his way back to London from Geneva recently.

"There was a time," he said today, "when I feared Canada would be disappointed with her Vimy memorial, but I have changed my mind. It is beautiful — the most outstanding memorial on the Western Front. The great French memorial doesn't begin to compare with it."

Liberal Elected By Returning Officer's Vote

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

OTTAWA, Dec. 16. — Election of Hon. Athanase David, Quebec Provincial Secretary in Terrebonne constituency today by the casting vote of the returning officer after a judge had ruled null the Nov. 25 balloting could not be duplicated under Dominion Election laws.

Under federal laws when an election has been declared null, either its result or its procedure, a new election must be held. The returning officer votes only when there is a tie and this has happened only once or twice since Confederation. Officers here said there could be no set of circumstances under the federal statute where a judge could rule out the result of an election and the returning officer proceed to elect one of the candidates by a casting ballot.

ELOQUENT SILENCE

"A young man," said the ready-made philosopher, should learn to say No.

Yes, replied Farmer Corntossel, I feel that my boy Josh ought to take at least that much trouble. When I ask him to help around the place he simply gives me a haughty stare."

The seventeen-year locust spends only about one nine-hundredth of its life i nthe winged state.

::Its Quality Sells It—The fact that so many thousands of intelligent people continue to use Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil speaks volumes for its healing efficiency. Ever since it was first introduced it has grown steadily in public favor, owing entirely to its manifold usefulness in relieving and healing sickness. As a specific for cuts, burns, scalds and various inflammatory pains its record is beyond reproach.
