PHOTO RACKETEERS COLLECT IN COURT

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, Jan. 30 — (CP) — A Union-wide racket in the sale of photographs has resulted in many people being summoned for debt. Some, unwilling and unable to pay, have had garnishee orders issued against them or have had some of their furniture confiscated by messengers of the court.

Convicts are visiting homes seeking orders for enlarged copies of photographs of relatives and friends, sometimes in color. Customers are asked to sign order forms which, it is alleged, are promissory notes, or documents which have the same effect in law. When the framed photographs arrive from some other centre of the Union and the people refuse to pay for them because they are nothing like the original specimens, they received prompt letter of demand from an attorney or financial agent.

A court official said: "The charge for the photographs, which are sometimes practically worthless, ranges from £3 to £30 ($12 to $120) each. Magistrates can do nothing in the matter once the summons has been issued. The debtor has no defence. "When payment is not made the messenger of the court has no alternative but to attach available assets in satisfaction of the amounts."

FOR CLEANER STREETS

LONDON — (CP) — People who throw bus tickets or other litter in Camberwell streets will be liable to a fine of £5 ($30) under a new by-law.

Court Decision on Libel-Conspiracy Charge Will Establish Precedent for Future

Preliminary hearing of the charges against Jack Kent Cooke, Harold Dingman and Dr. Charlotte Whitton in an Edmonton court has been concerned so far with admissibility of evidence by the defamatory libel along with Dingman, who wrote an article allegedly based on a report by welfare worker Dr. Whitton, in which the Alberta welfare department's procedure of baby adoption was criticized. The Alberta government, in bringing conspiracy charges against the three, have invited court decision on an issue involving freedom of the press in Canada. Whatever decision the court reaches will establish precedent for such charges in future.

Describes Visit To North Rustico

Like many other fishing villages, the waterfront on North Rustico is lined with numerous wharves and fish houses, and during the summer months these points are the scene of much activity. Here you will see scores of boats discharging their cargoes of fish and fishermen preparing for curing the catch for market with the efficiency and speed of the experts they are, in their particular line of business. Here also you will find factors in operation, catering the several varieties of fish which are shipped to various centres throughout the continent. But at this time of the year the settlement presents a far different appearance. The fish houses are deserted and the numerous motor boats have been hauled up on the shore.

The population of North Rustico is mostly French, as you are bound to notice when I relate the names of those I saw or called upon. The community can boast of one of the finest schools in the province, and the Roman Catholic Church, which is directly across the road from the school, is a beautiful structure. Many new homes have been constructed throughout the settlement during the past few years. My first call was made at the well-patronized general store of Peters and Gallant, where I conversed with the proprietor, Alban Peters. On several occasions in the past I have been a guest at Alban's home for dinner, a Mrs. Peters always provided a most appetizing meal. As I wandered around the shore for a few minutes, I made the acquaintance of Tom Johnston, the bookkeeper; Eric LeClair, the egg-grader, and several clerks, including Stanley Doucette, Jean Gallant, Marion Gallant and Alma Rowlands. At the co-operative store I met the manager, Joseph Gaudin, and his staff of assistants, in the persons of Wesley Smith, Arthur Dolron and Anita Dolron. Next door I called in to see Miss Amanda Campbell, the postmistress, and over at the garage I saw Edmond D. Gallant and Lawrence Doucette.

Convenient Service At the time of writing this article the paved road to Hunter River, a distance of nine miles, was blocked with snow but previous to this a daily bus service was in operation between North Rustico and Charlottetown, which was a great convenience to the residents of this section of the country. Hunter River, by the way, is the nearest railroad point. Among the fishermen I saw or met were John Allen, Henry P. Gauthier, Joseph Blaquiere, George A. Pineau, Lawrence P. Gallant, Vincent Gallant. I also had the pleasure of meeting several of the women-folk of the community, and numbered among these were Mrs. Joseph Blaquiere, Mrs. Bridget Gauthier, Mrs. Henry P. Gauthier, Mrs. Joseph B. Gallant, Mrs. John Allen, Mrs. Austin Doucette, Mrs. George A. Pineau, Mrs. Alphonse LeClair and Mrs. William V. Gauthier. I called in to renew the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Dolron. Jack is a veteran of the First World War. Some other residents I saw or met were Mrs. Dolron, Claude M. Peters, Urban F. Dolron, Augustin Gallant, Annes Perry, John M. Gallant and John James Gallant, the bus driver.

Then I made my way down to what is referred to as "The Harbor," which is about a half mile from the village itself. "The Harbor" comprises about fifteen families, the lighthouse, a factory and a number of fish houses and wharves. It is located right at the mouth of the harbor which is probably why it is referred to by this term. Nearby is a smooth, sandy beach, one of the many on the north shore of the Island which are famous as bathing resorts. As is generally the custom, when I am in this particular part of the village, I called in to see Andrew F. Doucette and his neighbor, Mr. Connick, two places where the traveller is always assured of a warm greeting.

The Irish Moss industry has been of immense value to the Rustico people. Practically any time you visit North Rustico during the summer months you will notice this product of the sea spread out to dry in numerous yards and fields throughout the settlement. It is gathered at the shore by all members of the family, cleaned, dried and sold to buyers who make regular visits for this purpose. "Island Traveller" in the Halifax Herald.

GADGET MAKERS KEEP PATENT OFFICE BUSY

TORONTO, Feb. 2 — (CP) — Proof that Canadians are gadget minded is found in the number of applications for patents for everything from cockroach traps to a baby-bottle feeding support. A total of 17,000-odd patent applications were filed in Canada during 1942, the largest number of any year since the opening of the patent office in 1869. Henry Tully of Winnipeg invented the cockroach trap which has a poison bait container for attachment to a wall. Joseph Ayotte of La Sarre, Que., dreamed up the cow-tail-holder gadget that keeps bossy's switcher in place. Jacob Barron of Calgary came through with a coin-wrapping machine while Alphonse Guilmaine of St. Joseph Que., invented a contraption to feed junior while mama washes the dishes. "Then there's a combination cigar-holder and ash tray, a two-wheeled golf bag carrier for tired golfer, an automatic egg boiler, a tailless airplane and hundreds of other articles.

103-YEAR-OLD WOMAN DOES OWN HOUSEWORK

BEEBE, Que., Feb. 2 — (CP) — If Mrs. Emma Moir had been born one day later she would be celebrating her 28th birthday next month instead of her 104th. Known as the grand old lady of Beebe, Mrs. Moir was born Feb. 28 and just missed being a "leap year baby" by a matter of hours. She is the oldest resident of this district on the Quebec-Vermont border although some of her neighbors across the line run her a close second.

Still in good health and able to do her own work around the house, Mrs. Moir is an active knitter and during last year she knit more than 100 pairs of tiny souvenir mittens. Some of these she sends to friends as gifts with a bit of her own poetry attached and others are sold at the Beebe church Christmas sale.

"Hard work and no worrying" is her recipe for longevity. Mrs. Etta Longway, a former Beebe resident who now lives at nearby Derby Line, Vt., is candidate for long-living honors. She celebrated her 90th birthday Jan. 17.

Although her eyesight and hearing are poor, Mrs. Longway too is in remarkably good health and still gets around her home. Longevity is a characteristic of her family. Her sister, Mrs. Rosella Tolman of North Bay, Vt., will be 96 next April and three brothers lived past their 90th year.

DR. CHARLOTTE WHITTON LONDON — (CP) — Average age at a Hackney old age pensioners party was 67.
