Eden Would Go Anywhere, Peace

LONDON (AP)—Prime Minister Eden has "very much in mind" the possibility of a conference with President Eisenhower, Parliament was told Tuesday night.

Richard A. Butler, acting for the prime minister, said that "the time of it, however, must be left to the heads of governments."

Eden, now resting in Jamaica, has previously announced he is ready go "go anywhere" for summit talks in the interests of peace.

Eisenhower has given the impression he prefers to wait and deal with current world issues through the United Nations.

The bidding:

Pass	Pass	1 ♥	2 ♥
4 ♥	Pass	Pass	6 ♠

Opening lead—two of diamonds.

Everybody at the table was bidding hearts. The opponents were up to four already. South was getting more and more enraged. Here he had finally been dealt a dream hand, thirteen practically sure tricks in his own hand. So what happened? East and West were making pests of themselves.

He hated the thought of jumping into seven spades singlehanded. He had visions of finding partner with a void in spades and beautiful club support. So South compromised and bid only six.

The defender with the East hand was Lee Hazen, well-known expert. Here is his report of what then happened, as told in the Bridge World Magazine.

"I was disappointed when declarer ruffed the opening diamond. South went into a long trance, and finally came out of it by cashing the ace of hearts and then leading the ten of spades.

"My partner discarded a low heart, and I acted like the typical young lawyer that I was. The first thing you learn in law school is to be suspicious. You spend several hours a day being suspicious of people, of things and of ideas. If you're really good, you eventually develop the ability to be just abstractly suspicious.

"I found it easy to be suspicious at this moment. What was declarer trying to do to me? I didn't bother to work it out. I just knew that if declarer wanted me to take the jack of spades it couldn't be good for me to oblige him. So I played the three of spades and stared at declarer with a cold legal eye.

"South went into a new trance and then led the ace and king of clubs. By this time I was carried away by the spirit of the thing. I had refused one trump trick, and nobody was going to bully me into taking another.

"So I discarded a heart instead of ruffing and South struggled quietly for a few more tricks but then went down."

Hazen had, of course, found the only defense to beat six.

BEDTIME STORIES

Peter Makes A Call

He profits most who is polite.
It pays as well as being right.
— Peter Rabbit.

It was winter. There was no doubt about this. Every morning when Peter Rabbit looked out of the dear Old Brierpatch the Green Meadows were not green at all. They were white with frost. Every night Jack Frost was a busy person. There had been one of two days when it was quite warm. On one of these Peter had learned something that was still hard to believe. He had seen a butterfly named Mourning-Cloak and learned that she was planning to sleep through the winter. That very same day he had met Woolly Bear, a caterpillar, who was also intending to sleep through the winter.

Peter looked over at the roof of the house standing well above the water.

This set Peter to wondering about other folks. The more he wondered, the more he wanted to find out how others were spending the winter. He knew that Johnny Chuck had gone to bed and wouldn't come out to stay out until spring. He knew that Nimble-heels the Jumping Mouse had done the same. He sometimes wished that he could sleep like that. Then again, he was glad he couldn't. "Just think of all those fellows miss," said he to Mrs. Peter.

"They are lucky to miss them, if you ask me," said Mrs. Peter.

But Peter didn't agree to that. Curiosity is always afraid of missing something, and Peter is full of curiosity. "I wonder," said he, "what Jerry Muskrat is doing these cold days."

"He probably is doing just what he does every winter. You don't need to go over to find out," declared Mrs. Peter.

Peter said nothing. He pretended not to hear. But the first opportunity he got when Mrs. Peter's back was turned he slipped out of the dear Old Brierpatch and away he sent, lipperty-lip, lipperty-lip straight over to the Smiling Pool.

The Smiling Pool wasn't exactly smiling. It looked black and cold. Just looking at it made Peter shiver. You know water can look very, very cold sometimes. Around the edges there was ice. There were no big green lily-pads at the head of the Smiling Pool. Grandfather Frog was no longer to be seen there. Peter missed him. He missed his deep voice. In fact the Smiling Pool seemed a very lonely place, for though he looked this way and that way Peter couldn't see a single person anywhere. He had come over to call on Jerry Muskrat, but Jerry was nowhere to be seen. Peter looked over at Jerry's house out in the water. He wished he could go inside and see what it looked like. But, of course, he couldn't. The doorway was down under water at the bottom of the Smiling Pool.

Peter looked over at the roof of the house standing well above the water. Somehow it looked different from what Peter remembered. It had a new look.

"I do believe Jerry and Mrs. Jerry have been doing some work on that house," thought Peter. "I wonder if they have done it to get ready for winter. I'm glad I don't have to do anything to get ready for winter. I wish Jerry Muskrat would show up. I want to make a call."

No Room For Two Farm Organizations

OTTAWA (CP)—F. Waldo Walsh deputy agriculture minister of Nova Scotia, told Canadian Federation of Agriculture officials at the federal-provincial agricultural conference Tuesday: "You fellows better pull up your pants."

He said it is time the CFA, which he helped to set up, adopted new platforms from the programs of some of the new farmers' organizations. He mentioned in particular the Interprovincial Farm Union Council.

"There isn't any room for two farm organizations," Mr. Walsh said. Each had suggestions to improve the farmers' lot that the other could use. He urged the two organizations to get together.

Hungarian Faculty Chooses Canada As Future Classroom

By KEN METHERAL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

VIENNA (CP)—More than 300 Hungarian teachers and students who stuck together through revolution and flight have chosen Canada as their new classroom.

The entire faculty and student body of the 153-year-old forestry school of Hungary's University of Sopron is expected to set up quarters soon after the new year in a coastal British Columbia construction camp.

The move was suggested by the 29 professors and 285 students of the school, and Canada lost no time in trying to arrange the lock - stock - and - barrel academic transplant.

"This will be a tremendous asset for Canada," J. W. Pickersgill, the Canadian immigration minister, said Monday in announcing the expected exodus from the Austrian refugee camps where the students, professors and 25 wives and other dependants are sheltered.

The group escaped from Hungary about two weeks ago and sounded out Canadian Ambassador J. Scott MacDonald on whether they could transfer in a body to Canada and continue their studies.

Canadian officials went to work, and a plan was formulated in 18 hours of speedy negotiations by the University of British Columbia and the Powell River Paper Company.

ARRANGE CAMP HOME

Many details are still to be worked out, but embassy officials say it is "almost certain" that the offers will be accepted and that the faculty and students will move to Canada to a construction camp 70 miles up the coast from Vancouver.

The accommodations are expected to be ready Jan. 15. If present plans go through on schedule, the Hungarians will reach Canada by ship in early January.
