Huge General Motors Plant Takes Shape Near Montreal

MONTREAL (CP)—What was a few months ago a vast tract of land lying all but fallow now is a forest of steel beams and cranes waiting to complete the next step in construction of a new General Motors Corp. manufacturing plant.

The physical change in the land of Ste. Therese en Haut just north of here is accompanied by a less apparent but important change in the economic activity of the farming area.

Until the 1960s the farmers planted what they wanted in the $75,000-plus plant when it opens in about a year will come employees—1,000 at the start and ultimately 2,500. Those who settle in the immediate area are going to need housing.

There now are about 450 recently-built homes in the area and the developers now are confident that their original target of 2,200 homes is a very realistic requirement in view of the anticipated growth associated with GM and the other industries that are said to be looking towards Ste. Therese.

The salary range of most of the plant's personnel is expected to be between $5,000 to $7,000, a wage it will be able to afford the new homes in the area whose prices range upwards from $14,000.

Transportation interests are involved in planning and research since there will be a need for expanded railway and road facilities.

A major economic benefit to the community will be more jobs. It is understood the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the area has been asked to begin looking for a work force of perhaps 1,500.

Concrete footings are already in place at the 300-plus-acre plant site and the steel framework is to be placed soon. The roof and walls will be draped over the framework.

The remainder of the site, some 320,000 square feet, is to be used for parking areas, railway spurs, access roads and other needs.
