Many Britons Believe Ghosts Not Products Of Imagination

By ALAN WALKER

LONDON (CP)—Sir Francis Drake and a pack of eerie hounds might be riding across the desolate Dartmoor plains tonight.

But wait a minute—Sir Francis died in 1596.

The rider? Drake's ghost, of course.

The baying of his hounds is said to be so terrible that any living dog that hears them dies on the spot.

Chains clank and dreadful wails split the damp air of many a British stately home, so they say. Drake's outdoor excursions are the exception. For instance, Queen Victoria's ghost roams Balmoral Castle Henry XIII haunts Hampton Court. So do some of his executed wives.

Less noble figures called poltergeists lurk in smaller dwellings — country cottages and seaside shanties — and play tricks on residents.

Few Britons think ghosts are purely the products of imagination. Many learned members of the Society for Psychical Research, founded in 1882, say there can be some manifestations of dead persons.

Even the Church of England takes the official position that ghosts are possible. "We do not dismiss it as superstition," a spokesman said. "I think it must be admitted that there good and bad spirits in the world."

Church officials occasionally conduc services of exorcism—what used to be "damning by bell, book and candle."

Norman Dixon, 26, and his wife Audrey said their bedclothes had been mysteriously pulled off; that they had felt cold objects on their backs and fingers digging into their sides, and that they had seen zigzagging lines shimmering on the walls of their Sunderland house. The previous residents had been interested in spiritualism.

Rt. Rev. J. A. Ramsbotham, bishop of Jarrow, exorcised the poltergeists in a 10 - minute service.

Glamis Castle in Scotland, where Macbeth is said to have murdered King Malcolm, is probably the most famous haunted building in the world. Besides ghostly forms, chilling winds in corridors and unexplained noises, there is an awful secret known only to the Earl of Strathmore, who lives there, and his eldest son.

The Tower of London has more than its share of ghosts. Restless persons who were beheaded there are said to stalk the passageways protesting their innocence.

AVOIDS ANNE

Windsor Castle as well as Hampton Court boasts Henry VIII. He strolls the cloisters and tactfully times his outings to avoid meeting his former wife Anne Boleyn who also walks there

One of Britain's most frightening ghosts is that of Lord Soulis, "Terrible William," who practised black magic. He used to kidnap children, take them to the dungeons of Castle Hermitage in Scotland and use their blood in his rites.

When village folk caught him they threw him into a cauldron of boiling lead. Present-day villagers refuse to go near the castle. "Terrible William" is supposed to return sometimes to re-enact his grisly crimes.

The Man in Grey is more benign. Supposedly a stage - door Johnnie at London's Theatre Royal, he was murdered by a man who was a friend of an actress and was walled up somewhere in the theatre. Now he attends opening nights, dressed in early 18th-century costume.

Most members of the Society for Psychical Research view these famous ghost stories with some suspicion and note their value to the tourist industry. But poltergeists are often harder to explain away and society investigators sometimes credit them as genuine psychical phenomena.

Poltergeists—a German term meaning "racketing spirits"—set fires, play musical instruments, shift furniture and turns radios off and on. One hygeaic poltergeist at Poole specialized in flushing toilets. Exorcism eliminated him. The plumber couldn't.

A newspaper survey a few years ago showed most British ghosts are in Sussex. One-fifth of them appear in daylight. More than half are middle-aged. Five per cent are children.

And as would be expected of a nation so universally fond of man's best friend, two per cent of ghosts are dogs.

Johnson Asks FBI Probe Over Kickback Complaint

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Johnson has asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation to investigate a senator's charge Philadelphia contractor Matthew H. McCloskey Jr. paid a $35,000 kickback on a contract for the $20,000,000 Washington, D.C. stadium.

White House Press Secretary George Reedy, disclosing this here, said Johnson asked the FBI to "look into the matter" to determine whether there had been any violation of federal law.

The president made his request Tuesday. Reedy said.

This was shortly after Senator John J. Williams (Rep. Del.) said in a Senate speech $25,000 of the kickback was channelled through Bobby Baker, resigned former secretary of the Senate's Democratic majority, into the 1960 Kennedy-Johnson campaign fund.

The other $10,000 was alleged to have gone to Don B. Reynolds, a local insurance agent, who handled the performance bond for the stadium contract.

QUESTION ASKED

Asked if members of the Democratic national committee might be questioned, Reedy answered:

"It's entirely up to the FBI. I'm no expert on investigative techniques."

He declined to describe Johnson's reaction to Williams charge but commented "such charges are not uncommon. I doubt that he was surprised—this is a campaign year."

Williams, in his Senate speech Tuesday, demanded an immediate reopening of a Senate investigation of Baker's outside business activities while he was the Democrats' secretary. He claimed two federal laws had been violated:

One making it a crime for a corporation to give a political contribution; the other requiring a fine of up to $5,000 and imprisonment up to five years for a political contribution of more than $5,000 in behalf of a candidate for federal office.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Dem. Mont) said he will make a decision in the near future on whether to hold a new Senate investigation of Baker in addition to the FBI inquiry.

Baker, while the Democratic secretary, was closely associated with President Johnson who was then majority leader of the Senate, and was also associated with Reynolds in the insurance business.

Williams said his kickback charge is based on new evidence provided by Reynolds in a statement given to Williams.

RCMP Probe Assassination Statement

OTTAWA (CP)—Justice Minister Favreau said here RCMP officers have made a "close investigation" of a statement by a Quebec separatist an attempt would be made to kil the Queen when she visits Quebec next month.

Mr. Favreau said it seemed clear that Richard Bros, 18, admitted member of le Front de Liberation Quebecois, stated "conclusions he has drawn" when he made the statement in an interview broadcast Tuesday by a Toronto radio station.

Bros completed a year's jail sentence last July for arson and theft in connection with FLQ activies in Montreal.

The broadcast statement was "minutely looked into," Mr. Favreau said. He could not say what further action might result but said every precaution was taken in cases of this nature.

Bros stated in the radio interview he knew of no specific assassination plan. He said information about an attempt on the Queen's life reached him from outside Montreal's Bordeaux Jail while he was a prisoner there

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

The bidding:

| East | South | West | North |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pass | 1♦ | 3♠ | Dble. |
| 4♠ | 4♦ | Pass | 5♦ |

Opening lead — queen of spades.

The prime purpose of a preemptive bid is to crowd the bidding in the hope that it will cause the opponents to reach the wrong contract.

Thus, in the present case, after his partner passes, West has every reason to think his opponents can make a game. Furthermore, nothing terrible is likely to occur if he gets doubled at three spades. His hand figures to take five or six tricks by itself, and, if it turns out that North - South have a game or a slam, the penalty may actually prove worthwhile.

In the actual case, North doubles, and East, with a good suit of his own, runs to four clubs. After South rebids his suit, North raises to five diamonds, which becomes the final contract. Note that the contract might have been three notrump (making five) if there had been less interference by the opponents.

As is at hands, though, five diamonds is a sound contract which cannot be defeated if played correctly. However, it must be granted that many declarers would go down at five diamonds.

West leads the queen of spades, and if South is careless he loses the contract right away. The proper play is to duck the queen and let West win the trick. When West continues with the jack, South ducks again. If West then plays the ten, South ducks once more, this time ruffing the spade. Declarer then easily takes the rest of the tricks.

If South makes the mistake of playing West for the dummy on the opening lead, as many players would, he eventually goes down one Declarer should realize, on the bidding, that West has six spades and East none, and he should therefore let West win the first two tricks.

Another way of expressing the same thought is to say that South sees eleven tricks as dummy comes down. All he has to do is take the proper steps to preserve them.
