Sable Island Seems To Be Moving East

Dreaded Menace Creeps Like Giant Octopus After New Victims; Lighthouses Moved.

(By George C. Murray, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Like a giant octopus cheated of its prey and seeking new victims, Sable Island appears to be moving—creeping eastward.

As it moves, this dreaded menace of the Atlantic tries to shake off the life-saving equipment that has lessened the power of arm-like shoals, reaching out under the sea to grasp the wayward ship.

Three times since 1873, when the equipment was set up, Canadian Government engineers moved lighthouses eastward as the west end of the island disappeared, and one beacon left in its original position was carried away by the waves.

Sable Island is situated 110 miles south east of Cape Canso, Nova Scotia. Its shoals, extending under the sea for about 17 miles, have dragged more than 200 vessels to their doom. The island is known to the shipping trade as "the graveyard of the Atlantic," and a chart in the office of C. H. Hosterman, district agent for the Department of Marine, shows the position of each wreck. It looks like a cemetery map.

There are 40 people on the island, and they have become so accustomed to the roar of the pounding sea that they would not trade their wind-swept isolated domain for the most comfortable homes ashore.

Four times a year they are visited by the government steamer, Lady Laurier, which brings them supplies from Halifax. These visits are the most important events of the year; the arrival of the ship means news from friends ashore, papers to read good things to eat.

But it is a hazardous undertaking to deliver supplies to Sable Island. The dangerous shoals must be shunned, and often the Lady Laurier has to stand off for days until the raging seas subside enough to permit a small boat to float. This month's trip of the steamer was typical of journeys to the island.

She sailed from Halifax on Sunday, Feb. 14, but could not land passengers or cargo because of strong north west winds that whipped the Atlantic into fury.

On Wednesday, February 17, some passengers were landed but the crew found it impossible to move the cargo. Next afternoon the remaining passengers reached shore and nearly all the supplies were landed. During the last trip, one of the boats was swamped as it neared the island. The breakers caught it and tossed boat and men, including the superintendent of lights, high and wet on the shore. The steamer returned to Halifax on Feb. 19.

The island is constantly changing in shape, owing to the action on the sand of wind and wave, and tends to diminish in size. Since 1763, when taken over by Great Britain, it has shrunk from 40 miles in length to 20, from 2 1/2 in breadth to one, and from 200 feet in height to 85.

HAMILTON, Ont., Feb. 28.—(By The Canadian Press)—William Southam, Pioneer in Canadian newspaperdom, and founder of the Southam newspaper group of five daily publications, died here over the week-end. He was 88 years old.

NO CHILD'S EDUCATION COMPLETE WITHOUT THE NEWSPAPER, PROF. PITKIN DECLARES

No child's education is complete without the newspaper, for through it the child can secure a vivid, realistic picture of life, the world and its affairs, asserts Walter B. Pitkin, Professor of Journalism at Columbia University, writing in the March issue of 'The Parents' Magazine.'

NEEDS NO SPECIAL DIRECTION

Until he is about 12 years of age, the child needs no special direction in his newspaper reading, but after the age the parents should aim to stimulate the interest of the child in current affairs, continues Professor Pitkin. Through discussions of news at the dinner table, the making of scrap books and files of clipping on certain subjects, the child's interest can be directed into constructive channels.

That children do not learn how to read a newspaper intelligently is evidenced by the appalling ignorance of high school students events, continues Professor Pitkin. "I recently studied," he says, "the results of a simple test in current information taken by several thousand high school students. Ninety per cent. of them failed miserably and ignominiously. Another five per cent. did passably well. Not more than five per cent. of the entire group had even a reasonable grasp of ordinary news events."

"Intelligent parents have a magnificent opportunity to supplement school training," concludes Professor Pitkin, with informal and thereby doubly valuable discussion and study of today's important news. It would be an immensely interesting project for parent and child.

To Present Regimental Colors

HALIFAX, N. S., Feb. 26— Regimental colors, approved by H. M. the King and donated by the Hon. Robert E. Harris, late Chief Justice of Nova Scotia, to the Annapolis Regiment, 1st Battalion, of Annapolis Royal, N. S., will arrive here Saturday in the Canadian Pacific Montrose, consigned from London by C. P. Express to R. V. Harris, K. C. of Halifax, nephew of the late Chief Justice. It is expected that the colors will be presented at Aldershot camp this summer, when the Annapolis Regiment will rank as one of the few military units in eastern Canada carrying their own regimental colors.

With the presentation, Annapolis Royal with ancient Fort Anne, besieged alternately by British and French troops for a hundred years since the founding of Port Royal by Champlain in 1604, will recall a distinguished military history, rivalled only on the North American continent by that of Quebec and Louisbourg. The commanding officer of the regiment is Lieut. Col. C. A. Good, of Lawrencetown, N. S. The late Chief Justice Harris was a member of one of the oldest families residing in Annapolis Royal.
