The "Hidden" Hall

"Really, I must beg your pardon for answering you like that!" she almost sobbed when she had got the back her breath. "It isn't hysterics it's only—oh, if you know how you quait you look in those clothes and with that black stuff over your face! Exactly like a respectable scarecrow in a potato field. They never have any faces, you know, and they always wear flappy hats and dug-out coats like yours."
 "But there! I won't laugh any more. I'll listen to what you've got to say, and if you don't mind, I'll listen sitting down." (Her knees trembled a little, though her voice was steady.)
 Her impudence took the enemy by surprise. At the word "scarecrow" he made a quick movement of anger, and Pan thought he would strike her; but after an instant's hesitation he changed his mind. "I can make you regret your impertinence if I choose!" he exclaimed, still in French. Yet the girl guessed it was all he could do to control his voice.

"Of course," she said in a different tone. "You're master here. You can do whatever you choose—except control what I do to do."
 "I have not told you yet what I wish you to do," the Masquerer reminded the girl, so amazed by her manner that mechanically he altered his own.

"You told me in your letter," said Pan, seating herself in the more comfortable of the two old chairs. "You disregarded my wishes—my advice—expressed in that letter. Your answer consisted of the one word, 'No.'"
 "It did. And it will consist of the same old word again, if your wishes are the same!"

"Do you not—when I explain to you the consequences will be if you are obstinate."
 "I suppose you'll threaten to feed me to those beastly fishes with their bulgy eyes and nasty, receding profiles! You can't do worse than that, anyhow. And you may keep your threat, before I consent to ruin Rawdon Wells! I'll try hard to disagree with the disgusting creatures."

"I make no threats," the man retorted. "I shall simply tell you what will happen."
 "Do!" said Pan. "But while you're telling me things, won't you tell how you got me out of my cell and brought me here? Oh, and by the way, I should rather like to know where here is!"

"You shall have both those explanations, if you decide to be sensible," was the reply.
 "You seem to want everything for nothing!" exclaimed Pan. "Supposing, even, that I gave you a written statement of all I know about my brother Captain Haste's wife—that guarantee would I have that you would set me free, unharmed? The way you are got up you look capable of tearing out my tongue and cutting off my fingers so I could neither speak nor write, once you'd finished with me—the way you kept their promises and freed their prisoners in the Middle Ages. You'd better be more diplomatic. Make a concession or two, to begin with, if you want to win my confidence. Tell me about the prison—and tell me where I am!"

 "Very well, why not?" said the man. "After all, to tell you what you ask can do no harm to me or any one—whatever becomes of you, Mademoiselle."
 "The affair of—rescuing you from your cell was easy for me. I never had any faces, you know, and they always wear flappy hats and dug-out coats like yours. That made the latter business easy, too. And as for this place—can you not guess?"

"It's at Hidden Hall Court!" Pandora gasped, on a sudden inspiration.
 "Of course! Where else should it be? You are in the 'hidden hall' itself."
 "But," she stammered. "Don't Sir Rawdon—told me once, when I asked if there were a hidden hall, that there was nothing hidden at all. It was only one of the family names in old days—'Hidden.' Surely, he ought to know. But, if he had known, he wouldn't have fibbed to me."
 "Sir Rowdon ought to know, but the fact is that he doesn't," said the Masquerer. "The secret was lost to the family for many years—ever since the days of the last Hidden or the first Welles. It was the Hidden who made the hall under the water—in the sixteenth century. In the eighteenth century the Welles came to the Court, and soon knowledge was lost of the play upon the old family name, which revealed, yet guarded, the secret: 'Hidden Hall.' Every one had heard an old legend but proof of the truth vanished—it has never been found again—till I found it—by accident."

"You?" echoed the girl, so deeply interested that she forgot her load of trouble. "Are you an architect? I know Sir Rowdon has had architects down to look for secret rooms and passages. They did come to a concealed door and a stairway leading to the cellar, but nothing else I ever heard of."
 "I am not an architect," the man broke in. "And, if I had been, I should not have discovered the 'hidden hall.' Because this place where we are now is not in the house. There are no mysterious spaces to be accounted for by an architect, not even under the house, though the entrance is from that cellar you spoke of."

Fieri, Itchy Eczema Healed Right Up By Applying Sulphur

Any breaking out of the skin, even fiery itching eczema, can be quickly overcome by applying a little Mentho-Sulphur, says a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, this sulphur preparation instantly brings ease from skin irritation, soothes and heals the eczema right up and leaves the skin clear and smooth.

It seldom fails to relieve the torment and disfigurement. Sufferers from skin trouble should get a little jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur from any good druggist and use it like a cold cream.

MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY
 By ARTHUR MORELAND

A. D. 924. Athelstan, son of Edward the Elder, was crowned at Kingston-on-Thames, on the stone which still stands in that ancient town. Now,adays, Kingston is chiefly celebrated for its stringent regulations against motorists. Athelstan successfully fought the Danes expelling them from, and annexing Northumbria. He went far towards consolidating the Saxon Kingdom.
