The Water-Sprite

COLOR CUT-OUTS

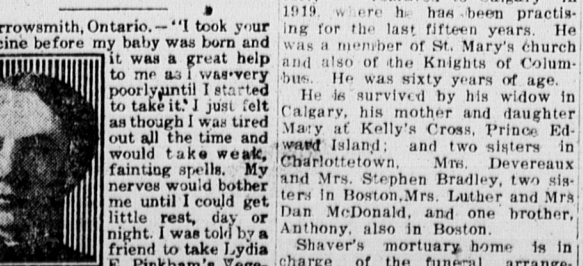

THE WICKED WATER-SPRITE. This is the fourth day's chapter of the story of "The Water-Sprite." Follow the adventures of the brother and sister who fell in the well. Soon you will have a whole set of cut-outs with which to act out the story.

"Come in, come in," cried the watersprite to the children. "I saw you playing by the edge of the well and it was I who caused you to fall in. I am lonely here in my well and I must stay and be my servants. Whatever I tell you to do that you must do without any questions."

TIRED OUT ALL THE TIME Nerves Gave Little Rest

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Harrowsmith, Ontario. "I took your medicine before my baby was born and it was a great help to me as I was very poorly until I started to take it. I just felt as though I was tired out all the time and would take weak, fainting spells. My nerves would bother me until I could get little rest, day or night. I was told by a friend to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I only took a few bottles and it helped me wonderfully. I would recommend it to any woman. I am doing what I can to publish this good medicine. I lend that little book you sent me to any one I can help. You can with the greatest of pleasure use my name in regard to the Vegetable Compound if it will serve to help others."

INSTALLMENT 25

On the last night of Tweedledee's life far out in the country a solitary figure was walking along a tiny path. At either side tall pines stretched their bristling arms above the traveler as though to hide him from the curious moon, while before him in the distance, glistening through a maze of tree-trunks, lay a sheet of sparkling silver--a luminous lake beneath the stars.

For many nights "Echo" had wandered through the fields, as happy as the wind at play, following his fiftal fancy, dancing in the moonlight, singing in the forest, chasing each stealthy shadow to the skirts of Mother Sorrow, where all such gloomy children should remain. But in the daytime he was careful not to sing, dance or about on his shoulder a little wooden demon--a little wooden demon that whispered in his ear and told him what to do. And he was careful not to disobey it--to brave the bright sunshine and the passing people, not to look into the eyes of man--for it was his brain that thus commanded, and by obeying he felt the dark domain of reason--the domain of Tweedledee--quite vanish at the touch of the rising moon.

The Boy At The Bay

My dear little fellow, I'm thinking of you. Your eyes of spun gold, your eyes azure blue-- Suggestive of heaven--its beauty of hue.

The blue in your eyes came from some summer sea; The rose on your cheek from some laughing sea; That smile on your lips--it won the heart of me.

The touch of your hand--'tis thrilling me yet; Your arms held lilacs with night-dews still wet; How vivid in memory that morn'g we met!

Like the meadow-lark's note in answer to dawn, Like laughing water where fountains are born, Was your musical voice on that magic morn.

I wooed you to linger, you but tripped away; The waves were singing to dunes down the Bay; Had you known my heart-ache, and tears, you would stay.

But other loves claimed you, their hearts strong and true; Why linger with me--mere husk, chaff and rue; You fled to the sunlight--my remnants with you.

In the depths of my heart your image is there-- Mean sorrow indeed for presence so fair; How dear this shrine as I linger in prayer!

"THE FOUNDATION OF HIS HEALTH"

Among the thousands who have publicly expressed indebtedness to Tanlac for normal weight, health and strength, is A. R. White, who recently said: "The foundation for my present excellent health was laid by Tanlac. For months I had been run-down. I had lost all enjoyment for food and suffered great discomfort from indigestion. My liver was sluggish and that tired feeling was on me all the time. "Three bottles of Tanlac relieved my troubles and started me off with a system so thoroughly toned up and renewed that I soon found myself feeling like a new man."

Well, one page of that is worth more than anything that I've ever written. And why is it? Because he's suffered; because he's lived it all--mud and body."

"I must have been terrible. Hektor! I know that it was terrible for me just knowing that this moment--from some great height--must have looked like a drop of dew glistening on a shadowy leaf."

"Echo" lifted his face toward the sky, and it was as beautiful in the pale moonlight as the face of your own joyous youth. Then he pulled himself slowly forward till his shoulders were over the bank. He fixed his large luminous eyes on the black, silent water beneath. As he stared down trying to pierce the shadows the little wooden demon could be seen nodding on his shoulder. Evidently it had fallen last asleep.

For some time he lay motionless in the soft grass, till finally the moon rising over the tree-tops seemed floating like a golden goblet on the surface of the water beneath his eyes. Then, very slowly and cautiously, a thin, shadowy arm reached out above this disc of steady light; groping, nervous fingers tried to seize it, but could not quite reach the glittering prize. The fantastic figure writhed forward like a snake, and again the long arm shot out.

For a moment it hovered above its fancied treasure and then plunged down with a splash of snow-white foam. There came a loud, frenzied cry, a cry that seemed echoed by a host of brothers--brothers hiding in the forest, in the tree-tops, in the valleys--and something long and black rolled off the bank, something that turned the water into gleaming patches of light. "Once more a thin, shadowy arm appeared, an arm that this time seemed grasping at the sky. Soon it disappeared and the foam and tiny waves changed to ripples--that ripples that the moon danced on like a silver boat. In turn these ripples subsided slowly, and the silver boat became a pale and agitated face--a face of many lines and wrinkles--the face of age and grief."

A moment later these lines and wrinkles were erased by the soothing hand of Time. And if another traveler had stood upon the bank looking down he would have seen nothing in this pale, floating face beneath him--nothing of what had gone before.

One beautiful night in August two figures might have been seen strolling leisurely across a shadowy lawn. Behind them was a large white house, brightly lighted; before them a little silver lake of flashing waves; above them a sky of fleecy clouds and flickering stars.
