Napoleon and the Cobbler.

On Napoleon's arrival at Mars-la-Tours the mayor, a farmer, tried in vain to make the speech he had prepared. Bowing and scraping, he stood fascinated by Bonaparte's scrutinizing black eyes—an unhappy squirrel in the gaze of the rattlesnake.

Close behind the trembling mayor stood an old shoemaker, in figure a true Don Quixote, clad in his working dress. "Why don't you speak, you fool?" he muttered from time to time to his leader. At last his patience gave way. He pushed the mayor aside, advanced, with his left hand removed his greasy cotton nightcap, with his right lifted the horn spectacles from his nose, made his bow and delivered the oration: "Emperor, you are on your way to thrash the Prussian rogues once more. I hope soon to see you return crowned with glory, and I have nothing more to say, but that Caesar and Alexander were botches in comparison with you."

The emperor laughed and inquired of the old man whether he had any sons. "Yes; four were in the army—two of these in the guards." Their names were taken down, and the honest shoemaker soon saw them raised to the rank of officers and found himself provided with a comfortable pension.—Blackwood's.

Two Civil War Messages.

It was a day or two after General Fitzhugh retired that the telegraph lines between Carlisle and Harrisburg were put in condition for service, and the first two messages that passed over them gave more than one officer and civilian a laugh. The Harrisburg operator was of the army variety and not noted for choice diction or even grammatical accuracy, but he could be terse on occasion. The Carlisle man, a civilian named Noble, probably knew more of the rules of syntax, but he was a bit flustered. Here are the messages—and in those days they were of record, since receiving and sending by sound was not in vogue:

Query—Has the rebels went?

Answer—They is.

After all there is merit in the interchange. There was no room for doubt as to what headquarters at Harrisburg wanted to know nor as to the military condition at Carlisle. But poor Noble! His friends nearly forced him to resign by the methods known as "josh."

Sardou as Stage Manager.

Sardou is one of the few great stage managers in Europe. He and Sir Henry Irving are probably the two best. "How is it done? Well, you see," replied M. Sardou, "I know exactly what I want, and I take care that I get it!" Sir Henry's answer to the same question would not, one imagines, be very different from this. Sardou does not read a lecture to an actor whose intonation is incorrect or whose gesture displeases him; he takes the actor's place on the boards for a few moments and goes through the part.

In theory this is simplicity itself; in practice it is sometimes productive of emotions which the scene is not intended to convey. As a rule, M. Sardou's demeanor at rehearsal is beautiful, but if people will not do as he requests he can tear his hair and a speech to tatters with the best of them. When the hurricane is over, he becomes Mr. Honeytongue again, but he has carried his point.—Cassell's Magazine.

The old-fashioned watchman who prowled about the streets of medieval London, with a lantern in his hand to proclaim his coming, and who announced his passage through the streets by shouting "All's well," was a very inefficient protector when compared with the metropolitan police of New York City, commonly known as the "Finest." The modern policeman does not proclaim his coming to the evil doer by shouting or by carrying a lantern. He does his work more quietly and effectively than the old-fashioned town watchman.

It is thus that in all the walks of life and in all occupations, times change and knowledge and efficiency increase. In this respect medical science has kept pace with the advance in other lines. Physicians and chemists have grown rapidly more skillful. There are medicinal preparations now-a-days that cure diseases that were a few years ago considered absolutely incurable. The final triumph in this respect is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It was first given to the world thirty years ago, and has stood the test ever since that time. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption, bronchial, throat and kindred affections. Thousands who were hopeless sufferers, and had been given up by the doctors, have testified to its marvelous merits. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. It makes the appetite hearty, the digestion and assimilation perfect, the liver active, the blood pure and rich with the life-giving elements of the food, and the nerves strong and steady. It acts directly on the lungs and air-passages, driving out all impurities and disease germs. An honest dealer will not try to persuade you to take an inferior substitute for the sake of a few pennies added profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. At all medicine stores.

Peril in Stamp Boxes.

A girl I know is betrothed to a young officer in the navy, and as his birthday is near at hand she has bought a pretty little stamp box in silver to give to him, but she is not going to give it to him, after all.

"Daughter," her father said to her, "if you wish that young man well, never give him a stamp box. You couldn't give him anything more dangerous. A man would better carry dynamite than stamps. One of the bravest officers in the navy has been for 20 years paying the penalty of his folly in carrying stamps. Everybody knows who he is. Years ago he received an order from the department which displeased him very much. He knew to whom he owed it, and he sat himself down that same night and expressed himself frankly on paper to the man he blamed for the obnoxious order. He had a stamp, and so he sent the letter off in that night's mail. If he hadn't had a stamp, he would not have mailed the letter till morning, and if he had kept it till morning he'd never have sent it at all and he would not have paid the penalty of 'sassing' the department.

"Don't send the young man a stamp box. The officer I've been telling you about says that his experience taught him never to carry stamps, but the trouble about the wisdom experience brings is that it usually comes too late to be of any use. Don't encourage the young man to carry stamps. It isn't safe."

A Naval Solomon.

Captain McB——, a canny Scot, was once in command of a troopship returning from India. On board he had as passengers three ladies, all wives of officers in her majesty's service.

Now, it fell out that the cabin allotted to them was fitted up to accommodate four, and consequently it contained four wash basins, one of which was far larger than the other three.

For the right to use this especial basin each lady put forth her claim, citing her husband's position in the army. But the husbands, unfortunately, all proved to be of equal rank, so to clinch the matter the trio bearded the captain in his cabin.

"We will leave it entirely to you, captain," they said, "and abide by your decision."

Captain McB—— cogitated duly and then declared solemnly, with the faintest twinkle in his gray eyes:

"Leddies, as it is no' a matter o' rank, I think it wull be that the oldest amang ye suld have the beegest bowl."

With murmured thanks they filed out again, but that basin was never used during the voyage.—Spare Moments.

Broncho Bill's Denomination.

During the first years of his career as an actor Will had in one of his theatrical companies a westerner named Broncho Bill. There were Indians in the troupe, and a certain missionary had joined the aggregation to look after the morals of the Indians. Thinking that Broncho Bill would bear a little looking after also, the good man secured a seat by his side at the dinner table and remarked pleasantly:

"This is Mr. Broncho Bill, is it not?"

"Yaas."

"Where were you born?"

"Near Kit Bullard's mill, on Big Pigeon."

"Religious parents, I suppose?"

"Yaas."

"What is your denomination?"

"My what?"

"Your denomination."

"O—ah—yaas. Smith Wesson."—"Last of the Scouts," by Helen Cody Wetmore.

Close to Nature.

The West Virginia mountaineer lives very close to nature, and viewed from many standpoints the relation is characterized by pleasing amenities. Juicy berries refresh him along the road; nuts drop into his path; "sang" (ginseng), which makes one of his sources of revenue, reveals itself to his eye as he follows the cows to pasture; a cool brook springs up to quench his thirst when weary of following the plow; pine knots are always within reach to make light as well as warmth; mud and stones easily combine in his hand to shape a daub chimney and a trough dug out of an old tree furnishes a receptacle that is as good for dough at one end as for a baby at the other.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Victim of Bad Seamanship.

The dean of Bristol in "Phases of My Life" relates the following:

"From time to time I met at dinner a great friend of Lord Gage's, Admiral Boyle. Invariably when we met this admiral of the old school would come to me and say, 'Do you, sir, read the account of St. Paul's shipwreck?'

"'Yes, it is the appointed lesson.'

"'Well, all I can say, as an old sailor, is that if any captain in her majesty's service handled his vessel as the captain of that ship did he would have been court martialed next day and dismissed the service.'"

Division of Labor.

Close Fisted Parent—I tell you, my son, it is a great deal harder to spend money with good judgment than it is to make it.

The Young Man (not so close fisted)—Well, father, let me take half the burden off your hands. You make it, and I'll spend it.—Chicago Tribune.

Couldn't Make the Correction.

A local paper published a long obituary of a man who had died in the community, closing with the statement that "a long procession of people followed the remains to their last roasting place." The family read the notice and discovered the supposed error and asked the editor to make a correction in the word "roasting," but he said he could not do it until seven years' back subscription that the deceased owed had been paid.—Exchange.

How They Managed It.

"And so you have finally succeeded in getting your husband to take the gold cure? I thought he always claimed that he could quit drinking whenever he wanted to?"

"Yes, he did. We have just convinced him that he ought to take something to make him want to."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Fish as Turtle Catchers.

A curious mode of catching turtle is practiced in the West Indies. It consists in attaching a ring and a line to the tail of a species of sucker fish, which is then thrown overboard and immediately makes for the first turtle he can spy, to which he attaches himself. The fisherman then hauls both turtle and sucking fish in.

Ahead of His Time.

"How do you like this idea of simplified spelling?"

"It makes me laugh. I've been spelling that way all my life, and till now everybody called me ignorant."—Chicago Record.
