BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

POOR MRS. CHATTERER

To worry love is ever host
And, worrying, it suffers most.
—Old Mother Nature.

Chatterer the Red Squirrel has been in his life has been in a higher place than he was when Redtail and Mrs. Redtail discovered him climbing up to their nest. It would have been bad enough to have had one of those Hawks swooping at him. Yes, sir, it would so. Now there were not only two trying to catch him, but at the foot of the tree Reddy Fox was waiting for him. There could be no getting away on the ground. He would have to get away through the treetops or not at all.

All the time Mrs. Chatterer was watching from another tree. Most of the time her heart seemed to be right up in her throat. Every time Redtail swooped at Chatterer Mrs. Chatterer's heart seemed to her to stop beating. Every time Mrs. Redtail swooped, that troublesome little heart seemed to do the same thing. Each time that Chatterer dodged her heart seemed to start beating a little faster as if trying to catch up.

It often happens that when people are in trouble or pain those who love them suffer even more than they do. Chatterer wasn't suffering pain, for so far he had not been touched by the great cruel claws or the stout wings of the big Hawks, but he was suffering fright, terrible fright. But much as he was suffering, Mrs. Chatterer, looking on, was suffering more. Chatterer was too busy dodging to think how frightened he was. Mrs. Chatterer, looking on and able to see just what was going to happen, was suffering much more from fright than was Chatterer. Love is like this. Love suffers for others more than others suffer for themselves.

Every time Redtail swooped at Chatterer, Mrs. Chatterer's heart seemed to stop beating.

"He shouldn't have gone over there. I told him he shouldn't. But he would go. Now he may never come back and what will I do then?" said Mrs. Chatterer to herself. It sometimes helps to talk to oneself when there is no one else to talk to.

Just then there was a whoosh, and a whish of wings. "Oh! Oh! Dodge, Chatterer! Dodge!" shrieked Mrs. Chatterer.

It is doubtful if Chatterer heard her, but he dodged and Mrs. Chatterer drew a long breath. He was trying to get up to a certain limb high in that tree. At first Mrs. Chatterer didn't understand what he was trying to do. It looked to her as if he might be going up to that nest. "He's crazy," thought Mrs. Chatterer. "He ought to keep away from that nest, and he should know it."
Poor Mrs. Chatterer couldn't sit still. She ran up and down the trunk of the tree she was in. Once she even jumped across to another tree. Somehow it was easier to be running about than to sit still and watch those dreadful Hawks trying to catch Chatterer. Now and then she shrieked a warning. Of course she saw Reddy Fox and of course she took care not to go down on the ground herself. She saw him grin as first one and then the other of the big

Contract Bridge

By Josephine Culbertson

WRONG TOO OFTEN

West made several bad decisions in the following deal:

East dealer. Neither side vulnerable. Rubber bridge.

♠ K	♠ 9 4
♥ K 10 7 5 2	♥ A 9 8
♦ 8 7 4 3	♦ A Q 10
♣ J 6 5	♣ A 8 1 4

South's bidding was very strange, but perhaps he could look into the future!

West's double of two spades was at best questionable, holding as he did four cards in his partner's bid suit. The fact that West had redoubled one diamond did not even vaguely imply that he was long in diamonds. He should have shown his diamond support, and East undoubtedly would have gone on to game at diamonds or notrump.

West's opening lead against the spade contract was another error — he selected the trump queen instead of forcing South right from the start with diamonds. Dummy's trump king won the first trick, and South (who could scarcely know that West had the singleton heart queen) ruffed a diamond to enter his own hand. Then he led a low heart, and covered West's queen with dummy's king. East, thinking that his partner must have a good reason for leading trumps, returned the trump nine to keep South from making more of his low trumps on diamond ruffs. South put up the ace and led another round of trumps. West winning. West exited with a diamond; South ruffed and led jack and another heart.

West should have noticed that his partner had played the heart eight on the jack and therefore — since he surely would not have misled West by false-carding at a crucial stage! — that East could not have more than three hearts, all told, with the nine to appear on this current trick. But West did not bother to count hearts — he ruffed the third round, and after that, defense was impossible.
