OUR BOARDING HOUSE MAJOR HOOPLE OUT OUR WAY BY J. R. WILLIAMS

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By B. JAY BECKER
The spade contract would require only ten tricks for game. South won the opening lead in dummy and returned a trump to the king. The maximum number of losers he had was four—a spade, two hearts and a diamond. It was hardly likely he would lose four tricks, but it was possible. Declarer played the A-K of diamonds, and when both opponents followed, the contract became certain. The next problem, now that four had become certain, was to find a way to make five. Playing a club and finessing the queen was unsound, because East might have the king in which case a heart return would jeopardize the contract. An alternate play of a club to the ace and the queen back, discarding a heart, would not guarantee five, though it would maintain four. The best play, the one chosen by South—he was the only declarer to make it—produced eight tricks by a simple expedient. South played a club to the ace and followed with a third round of diamonds. He then put West on lead with a trump. At this point it did not matter where the ace of hearts or king of clubs was located. West was bound to return a heart or a club. Either one would assure eleven tricks minimum. The nine of diamonds was an entry if a club was led. The king of hearts was worth a trick with a heart return. Opening lead—jack of spades. In duplicate bridge, picking up an extra thirty-point trick that would be insignificant in rubber bridge frequently makes the difference between a good score and an average score. In today's hand, taken from a tournament, declarer succeeded in making five spades, while all other competitors were making only four on the same cards. The three spade bid by South was correctly interpreted by North to represent either a six card suit or a good five card suit. In either case, the A-S of spades figured to be sufficient trump support, particularly since

BEDTIME STORIES

Peter Sits Tight
When you know not what to do, sitting tight may help you through. —Peter Rabbit.
Peter Rabbit found the truth of that saying long ago. Sitting tight has saved his life many times. There is a time to sit tight and a time to run. Peter prides himself on knowing which to do.
Peter had gone over to the Green Forest. He was over near Laughing Brook. Ice covered Laughing Brook in places, but it was open in many places where the water ran fast. Snow covered the ground and many of the broad branches of the evergreen trees were white now instead of green. It was very lovely over there. The Green Forest can be as lovely in winter as in summer.
Peter and watched Billy sit up on a big flat stone that was just above the surface of the water. Billy was looking up Laughing Brook. He was watching somebody. Peter looked up Laughing Brook. At first he saw no one. He wondered who or what Billy Mink could be watching so intently. Suddenly a round brown head bobbed out of water. "Little Joe Otter!" exclaimed Peter under his breath.
Little Joe swam ashore. He chock himself. Just the thought of being in that cold black water made Peter shiver. Yes, sir, it made him shiver all over. But Little Joe Otter wasn't shivering. He didn't look as if he knew what it was to be cold. The fact is, he didn't. Although he looked as if he had only one coat he really had two. The outer coat was of long hairs and quite waterproof. The inner coat was of short soft, very warm fur. Little Joe Otter could stay in the water as long as he wanted to and not get the least bit wet. For that matter, it was the same way with Billy Mink. Actually, it was colder out of the water than in it. But those fur coats kept out the cold air just as they did the cold water.
Peter didn't want to be seen by Little Joe Otter any more than he wanted to be seen by Billy Mink. Those two are cousins. Both are fishermen and both do some hunting. Both like meat as well as fish. No wonder Peter was sitting tight.
"I wonder," thought Peter, "if they like winter. I wonder if it brings hard times to them as it does to some of the rest of us. I wish I dared ask them. But I don't. No, sir, I don't."
So Peter sat tight and watched the two brown-coated cousins and hoped with all his might they wouldn't find out he was anywhere about.
Peter had come over there to see his cousin, Jumper the Hare, but had been unable to find him. Now he was sitting under a low bough of a hemlock tree. It was bent down with the weight of the snow on it and made a little dark cave. In it Peter was quite over sight and felt safe. He had rested there for some time and was just about to come out when he saw a small brown peep at the edge of Laughing Brook. Peter didn't go out. He sat tight. He didn't want to be seen by that small peep in the brown coat. It was Billy Mink. Peter is as much afraid of Billy Mink as he is of Billy's cousin, Shadow the Weasel.
"I'm glad Billy Mink has a brown coat instead of a white coat like his cousin, Shadow the Weasel. Had his coat been white I might not have seen him in time and that would have been just too bad for me."

France Proposes Guarantee Of Neutrality For Hungary

By HAROLD KING
PARIS (Reuters)—France Tuesday proposed a guaranteed neutrality for Hungary similar to that enjoyed by Austria.
French Foreign Minister Christian Pineau made the proposal in the National Assembly at the start of a three-day foreign affairs debate.
It was later learned that Pineau hopes to get American and British approval for the proposal. If he does, France will suggest four power negotiations with Russia to establish Hungarian neutrality.
Devoting his entire address to Hungary, Pineau told the assembly slight accent, she said that she was forced to flee Hungary because she had been a member of the revolutionary committee in the National Theatre of Budapest during the October revolt.
When the rebellion was temporarily crushed by Russia, she and her family headed for Austria but were captured by Russians near the outskirts of Gyor, Hungary.
DUBLED BACK
With fingers crossed, she agreed the next day to return to Budapest. A Russian officer pleaded with her. "Please go back to the theatre so that I may see you again playing Desdemona" from Shakespeare's Othello.
The family got on a train, ostensibly to go back to Budapest, but left the train a few stops later and headed for the Austrian border.
This time they made it without any trouble.
Speaking with emotion, the actress told a reporter: "I did not want to leave the people who knew and loved me." But she said friends told her she must leave or she might be arrested. She hopes to get a job in Hollywood justice.
The blonde, blue-eyed entertainer arrived here Wednesday with her husband and three children, after a plane trip from Vienna to McGuire air force base. —The fluent English with a just too bad for me."

France Proposes Guarantee Of Neutrality For Hungary

By HAROLD KING
"We must not give up the search for a solution which will allow the Hungarian people to recover their lost freedom, while at the same time guaranteeing the Soviet Union against the international consequences of such an emancipation."
Pineau is expected to make another speech today. Premier Guy Mollet probably will speak Thursday.
NOT IN DANGER
If the government decides to close the debate with a vote of confidence, the vote will be taken Friday.
The government is not in danger. Although there is widespread disappointment at the outcome of the British-French expedition to Port Said, there is little disposition to put the blame on the leaders of the French government.
The general view here is that the decision to accept a ceasefire was taken by Prime Minister Eden. But there has been little public recrimination against British. French political leaders are convinced that the power responsible for bringing the British-French expedition to a sudden halt was the United States.
Georges Bidault, former premier and foreign minister, in Tuesday's debate described the Hungarian rising as "the bankruptcy of communism."
Recalling the discussions of the plight of Hungary at the United Nations, bidault said: "We must note the abstention of India. This sounds the knell of neutralism. Neutralism is not neutral and non-violence does not condemn all acts of violence."
Gerard Dugnat, a Communist, was constantly interrupted when he urged the government—"the aggressors of Suez"—to "sweep your own doorstep before taking up the defence of Hungarian Fascists."
