The funeral of the late Mr. Trainor was very largely attended.

BURGESS BEDTIME

Continued from page 10 lay there flat on his back with his small legs as still as if they couldn't be moved. Black Pussy sniffed of him. That sniffing gave Little Toad a dreadful feeling. Little shivers of fright ran all over him, but there were all inside, so that they didn't show any emotion at all. Once more Black Pussy rolled him over. In fact, she rolled him over and over. It was a dreadful feeling. He was more frightened than ever if that were possible. So, of course, he lay as still as before. He couldn't have moved no matter what had happened. Black Pussy sat at down on foot or two away and watched Little Toad. Now and then Black Pussy would turn his head to look this way or that way then quickly look back at Little Toad to see if he had moved. At long last Black Pussy gave up and started away. Once he stopped to look back. Little Toad just lay there as still as before. There was no fun watching someone who did not move, and finally Black Pussy

Unholy Bond

By Cameron Dockery CHAPTER SIX Part Two

Following the Clear River Landing sign Richard swung onto the narrow road. When they came to the gates of Oakhart they were closed but under Richard's big hand the horn emitted a thin rasping summons and the Mileses came running. They swung open the iron gates, their faces beaming as Janet introduced them to Richard. "We've just been married, Mrs. Miles. I think I told you of our plans for Oakhart." Mr. Miles grinned mischievously. "It will be wonderful having children around the place, climbing the trees and fishing in the river." They ate supper in the light of a kerosene lamp and talked and planned long after Mrs. Miles had cleared the dishes away. It was twelve by the mellow chimes of Oakhart's grandfather clock when Richard yawned elaborately. "We'd better get some sleep, Janet, we have a long hard day ahead of us." He carried her suitcase up to the high-ceilinged room with the immense mahogany four-poster. For a long moment he stared at her, a strange unfathomable expression in his eyes. "Will you be all right here, Janet?" he said finally. "Yes, Richard, I'll be quite all right." "Fine, I think I'll take the small bedroom off the den. Better get used to it—I'll have to sleep down there after the children come." "Perhaps that will be best," she found herself saying. At the doorway he turned, he was smiling—a queer crooked smile. "I guess this will sound foolish but how about not putting out your light until after I turn off mine?" "Why?" "Just a silly notion—I don't want to disillusion the Miles family. Goodnight, Mrs. Eynon." She stood motionless listening to his footsteps receding down the stairs, wondering... If Janet Harris Eynon thought she worked hard as a registered nurse, she soon changed her mind. Oakhart made demands upon her time and strength that no patient, however ill, had ever asked. Until someone could be found to relieve Richard at Cosmopolitan Hospital, he carried on his evening duties there, but toward evening he would tear home in the little coupe, his eagerness evident in every gesture. "Let's see, Janet, what's next on the list?" "I think we'd better get the sun porch arranged first—then if we should have a patient—" He looked down at her. "Not worried, are you? We will have them, you know." "I know, Richard." Richard's big muscular hands took hold of her shoulders. "Look at me, Janet." She complied, hoping her eyes didn't reveal her apprehension. He stared at her, his pupils intent behind his glasses. "You believe in me, don't you? You know I was sincere about this scheme?" "How could I doubt it? You've worked like a dog around here." "All right, then, if there's worrying to be done, let me do it." She relaxed, feeling grateful and immature. With the library now a room for massage and heat treatment, the lower floor of Oakhart bore little resemblance to its former self. It was more cheerful and brighter, yet the excellent architecture and rich old woodwork gave the new sanitarium a stability and hominess that was lacking in similar institutions. Janet was upstairs turning the master bedroom into a comfortable living room when her work was interrupted by the chugging motor. A moment later she realized what it was—"Yoo-hoo... Miss Harris, Oh, MISS HARRIS!" Abigail Hartigan was standing in the hall. "Just came right in—the door was open," she announced. "I'm glad you did, Miss Hartigan, I'm Mrs. Eynon now, you know." "That's right. Saw the item in the newspapers." "Got your note," she said abruptly. "Thought I'd run over." "I tried to telephone you," Janet explained, "but I couldn't find your number in the directory." "Had it taken out—no one ever called me." Janet started to say, "That's too bad," and thought better of it. Somehow Abigail Hartigan didn't seem like the sort of woman who would need or seek sympathy. Now Janet turned toward the den and indicated the boxes of Mr. Hartigan's belongings. There was something very likeable about this brusque woman with her startling blue eyes. To be continued.

DONAGH W. L.

The May meeting of the Donagh Women's Institute was held on May 8th at the home of Mrs. Leo J. Trainor. The president presided and opened the meeting in the usual manner. Fourteen members were present and the minutes of the last meeting were adopted as read. A discussion in complete disgust. Presently, Old Mr. Toad poked his head out from beneath a cabbage leaf. "Well done," said Old Mr. Toad to himself. "Very well done." Little Toad didn't see him or hear him. "He has learned a lesson without knowing it," thought Old Mr. Toad.

IRISHTOWN SCHOOL

Reports of different committees were then heard and it was decided to pay three girls to scrub school. There was no report from sick committee. It was moved and seconded that a gift be bought for a new baby in the district. The place of next meeting will be decided at a later date, and on motion the meeting adjourned. A social hour was spent and delicious refreshments were served by the hostess, assisted by her daughter Elaine. Various topics of interest to teachers were also discussed. The meeting went on record favoring the present standard of teacher training with the hope of raising it rather than lowering it. A resolution was then made to this effect and will be forwarded to the Department of Education.

HAMPTON W.M.S.

The regular meeting of the Hampton W.M.S. was held at the Manse on Tuesday, May 6. The president, Mrs. J. Dixon, presided, and conducted the worship service. Hymns were sung and Scripture was read by Mrs. George Willett, followed by prayer by Mrs. Willett. MacFarlane. Readings were given by Mrs. C. Morrison, Mrs. A. Birk, Mrs. J. Rogerson and Mrs. L. Ferguson. Worship service closed with prayers by Mrs. W. Bell and Mrs. L. Ferguson and benediction. Business period then followed. Minutes of the last meeting were read, approved and signed and roll call was answered by 16 members. The financial report was encouraging and the community friendship secretary reported five home calls, 11 hospital calls, 10 cards and four treats. A donation of $5.00 was gratefully received from Miss Fricilla Nelson, Charlottetown. Next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. George Cannon, when lunch committee will be Mrs.

WEST ROYALTY W.I.

The May meeting was held in the schoolhouse on May 1st, with twelve members answering roll call. Committees reported the sick had been visited and fruit and flowers taken. The school committee asked if the Institute would buy ribbons, school colors, for the pupils taking part in the Musical Festival, and Mrs. England was asked to purchase these. Mrs. Lank reported on a visit to Beach Grove Infirmary and treats taken to patients, and Mrs. James MacInnis sent treats to the two boys who are in Germany with the Army. It was agreed to send two members to the executive meeting in connection with the District Convention on June 19th, also to send $1.00 to the Lady Alexander Fund. Canvassers were then appointed to collect for the Red Cross. On motion the meeting closed to meet in June at the home of Mrs. Fergus Connors. Lunch committee will be Mrs. W. Bell, Mrs. Elmer Inman and Mrs. C. Sherrin. Roll call is to be answered with the word "praise."

STELLA MARIS HOME AND SCHOOL ASSOCIATION

The monthly meeting of the Home and School Association was held on May 4 with the president, Mrs. Joseph Gaudin, presiding. The meeting was opened by prayer followed by the reading of the minutes. The treasurer, Mrs. Joseph L. Gallant, then read the financial report; and this was followed by the reading of the reports of the chairmen of the various committees. Members of the School Committee who visited the school during Education Week stated they were very much pleased with the work done there. Mrs. Leo R. Dolron introduced a discussion on the report made by Miss Roland who made a survey of the diet of some 120 pupils of Stella Maris School. The nutritionist offered to give a series of lectures on how to buy the most nutritious food that could be obtained from the money received as the Family Allowance. The members of the Home and School Association unanimously voted to accept Miss Roland's offer. Reverend Father Robin thanked the ladies of the school district who made and served cocoa to the children of grades I to V during the months of March and April. Then followed an interesting discussion of the proposed changes in teacher training. Mrs. M. J. Doy's spoke of the disadvantages that would result from having pupils of Grade X leave their homes to reside in the City at an age when they are most in need of guidance. All members of the Home and School Association were in favour of keeping pupils in their own districts, when possible, until they are old enough and have sufficient education to begin their normal training and all were of the opinion that the important work of teaching should not be entrusted to young inexperienced teachers who are only one year ahead of the pupils they teach in Grade X.

Study Group Meets At Stella Maris

On Friday afternoon, May 19, a teachers' study group meeting was held at Stella Maris School. Thirteen teachers and Mr. Dolron, supervisor, were present. A discussion ensued whether children under school age should be allowed to enroll and attend school at this time of the year. The majority of the teachers were of the opinion that children under school age should not be accepted.
