Topping's Last Stand

It was evident at yesterday's annual meeting that the Dominion Curling Association doesn't want to make bad friends with anyone. — Even if it comes to the point of recognizing the truth.

Retiring association president R. J. "Dick" Topping presented his report to the meeting yesterday, had it adopted as prepared, but minutes later saw a motion passed to delete two paragraphs of the report that took a crack at curling in Scotland.

Following the deletion of his 'personal comments as president", Topping said he felt the change was made because there were certain older members in the association who had prviously attended thr Scottish Games and didn't want to offend any of their friends in that country.

"I feel it is my duty, and right, to express my opinion as I see fit", said the then-president Topping to reporters. "All Canada can read my report. There is nothing I wish to hide."

The two paragraphs of Topping's report that were stricken from the records read as follows:

"Now in regards to curling in general in Schotland. Promtion of the game there seems to be sadly lacking. Facilities for curling leave much to be desired. There appears to be no interest or chance for young people to get into the game. My own personal opinion is that the Royal Club are sitting on tradition and not doing the job in their country that they should be, if it is their desire to promote curling and its welfare.

There are many fine people associated with the Royal Club and I am surprised that they do not liven up there attitude toward the game, especially after many of them have seen what has happened in Canada.

"Which brings me to the question I have asked myself many times. Why, when in Canada we have the largest, most progressive and active curling organization in the world, should we in our progressive manner of handling curling affairs, have to submit to the Royal Club our ideas, proposed rule changes, etc., for their sanction? I submit that the time is now here when we should inform the Royal Club that we no longer will do this. Many of you here including myself have made good friends in Scotland and I certainly do not make this suggestion with the idea of creating ill will but rather feel it is time we stood on our own feet as we should. I feel we could possibly maintain a token affiliation with the Royal Club as a matter of tradition and respect to the many fine people that are involved, and keep them informed of any changes or actions we make, but that is all. I would like to have this discussed later on."

In a preceding paragraph, not stricken from the report, Topping (officially, this time) said the Scotch Cup Play he saw last year was a flop. The curling facilities at Perth left much to be desired he said and 'the spectator support was poor. The last day of play a football game was scheduled in a stadium next door to the arena and some 16,000 people attended this, and if it hadn't been for we visitors, the arena would have been a pretty empty place."

Skinner Elected President Of DCA

F. A. (Art) Skinner an Edmonton insurance company executive who once operated a trap line in Canada's north country, was elected Wednesday as president of the Dominion Curling Association, succeeding R. J. (Dick) Topping of Oliver, B.C.

He was a supporter of the amateurism code the association rejected, although his Alberta curling association was against it along with most of the western affiliates.

The election of the 48-year-old Albertan at the association's annual meeting here—held in conjunction with the Canadian championship—was a formality. The executive moves up a notch each year by tradition and Skinner came to this island province as first vice-president.

He says with candor that he went to his first DCA meeting as a delegate of the Alberta body with a chip on his shoulder. He wanted to bring fresh vigorous ideas to the ruling body of Canadian curling.

Now he says it gives him deep concern whenever he hears the DCA being maligned.

"When I saw first-hand the work that the representatives of all our member associations were putting into the business of governing curling I realized the game was in good hands."

Frank Sargent of Port Arthur, Ont., advanced to the first vice-presidency — in effect the office of president-elect — while Gordon Bennett of Charlottetown moved up to second vice-president and William Lumsden of Winnipeg to third vice-president.

F.A. (ART) SKINNER

Harry Carter of St. John's, Nfld., joined the executive as fourth vice-president and C. H. (Charles) Scrymgeour of Winnipeg was reaffirmed as secretary.

A report showed the association's membership increased to 136,794 from 133,242 the previous year. The figures are exclusive of women and schoolboy curlers.

Saskatchewan Pulls Even With B.C. After 6 Rounds

By MARVEN MOSS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The magnificent Richardsons of Saskatchewan overtook bye-sidelined British Columbia for a share of the leadership in the Canadian curling championship by straffing Ontario 12-8 Wednesday night when the bonspiel swung past the halfway mark, the sixth round.

Both are unbeaten after five games in the 11-round competition. With 11 rinks, one entry draws a bye each round and the Richardsons were idle Tuesday.

Bruce Hudson's Manitoba foursome, upended twice in a surprise turn opening day, meanwhile rose to win No. 4 in a line and pulled in behind by shading Northern Ontario 10-8.

Play at the 2,000-seat Charlottetown Forum—a converted hockey rink—produced a record for the competition when Ian Baird's Nova Scotia rink from Kentville shaded New Brunswick 4-3 in a game marked by six blank ends.

That was the lowest combined score recorded since the event was launched in 1927.

A PARADOX

In something of a paradox, Nova Scotia's 1950 entry was the loser in a 5-3 match with Quebec, the previous low mark. That game—at Vancouver on the opposite coast—started with four blank ends.

Newfoundland fell to a sixth consecutive defeat, bowing 12-9 to Quebec, and Art Burke's last rock supplied the point that carried host Prince Edward Island to a 9-8 decision over win-starved Alberta in other night play.

A standing room crowd took in the five games and gave lusty support to Burke's hometown crew, the youngest in the event with an average age of 25.

Ernie Richardson and his family rink from Regina—four time winners of the national and world titles—counted four on the 11th end to break things open against 42-year-old Bob Mann and his three college boys from Ontario.

FLOWED SUPERBLY

Both skips flowed superbly through an 18-inch port with their last stones. But Ernie, 32, the tall fellow with the slick style, had the last one and he drew to the four-foot circle.

Baird drew to New Brunswick's shot rock in the 12th end with his final rock for the game-deciding point in the record-producing game.

The New Brunswick skip, Harold Mabey, is the oldest competitor in the bonspiel at 59 and throws first rocks. His left-handed son Hap,24, plays last.

They opened with a pair of blank ends, added a couple more in the fourth and fifth, another in the seventh and rounded it out with a clean house in the 11th.

Baird scored two in the sixth and one each in the ninth and 12th. Mabey clicked for singles in the third, eighth and 10th.

Lyall Dagg's Vancouver rink, playing what the skip described as "our best game" skimmed by New Brunswick 10-6 in the fifth round Wednesday afternoon and the Richardsons kept pace with an 8-5 triumph over Alberta.

In other games, Northern Ontario's Jack Polyblank upended Nova Scotia 7-4 for his third win in four starts, Manitoba sent Newfoundland down for a fifth loss in a 15-8 game and Quebec trimmed Ontario 12-8.

Host Prince Edward Island had the bye.

The ice at the 2,000-seat Charlottetown forum was keen.

'LET EM GO EASY'

"That ice was just dynamite," said Saskatchewan's skip Ernie, leaving the ice following a dead 12th end. "You had to let 'em go easy."

A three-count by the Richardson's on the 11th end was the difference and Ron Northcott's Calgary rink from Alberta bowed for the fourth time in five games, a mark considered shameful for a western rink.

The glass skips said the 28-year-old Northcott employed questionable strategy, going for a two-count instead of blanking the end. His last rock raised in a Saskatchewan stone.

Dagg, 34, a Vancouver public relations director for a paper company, bounced off the ice smiling. He was unhappy with his own game in the early rounds although his rink was curling well.

"I've started to curl now," he said. "I only missed one shot all game. We'll be ready from here on it."

The draw sends him against the Richardson's in the 10th round Friday and it shapes up as the match that could decide things.

The sixth round, scheduled to start at 8 p.m. AST Wednesday night, gives Dagg the bye. Richardson—winner of the bonspiel last year, the previous year and in 1959 and 1960—was pitted against Ontario.

Bruce Hudson's Manitoba rink heads in with a 3-2 mark followed by Art Burke with his rink from this city of 18,000 and Quebec's Elmer Black at 2-2.

Ontario and Nova Scotia stood at 2-3 and New Brunswick—with skip Mabey the oldest competitor in the event at 59—followed with 1-3.

Burke Downs Alberta In Thriller At Forum

The Charlottetown curling foursome skipped by Art Burke pulled one out of the fire last night as they edged the Alberta rink 9-8 in a duel to death in the Dominion Brier competition staged at the Charlottetown Forum.

The local rink counted one in the first end when Art Burke curled his last stone through a junked up house to take the Alberta shot and stay to count one.

Alberta collected three in the second end when the local foursome's attempted raise of their own rock with their final throw was light with Alberta lying one and two. Alberta skip Northcott then drew to the 6 o'clock mark on the 8-foot circle to count three.

The teams blanked the third end when Burke knocked out the Alberta shot in order to maintain last stone. Burke scored two in both the fourth and fifth ends to take a 5-3 lead at the end of five.

SMART MOVE

Burke deliberately blanked the seventh in order to maintain last stone. He picked up one in the eighth when, on his final stone, he drew to the 4 o'clock mark on the 8-foot circle to take one and win the even end. Burke counted one in the ninth when he brought his last rock to rest at the 3 o'clock mark on the 8-foot circle for number one position. The Alberta rink then made a costly miss on the delivery of its last rock to allow Burke to count one and steal another end.

Burke picked up one in the tenth when the nifty little skip displayed some of the curling ability he is capable of, when with second last rock he raised his own number three to shot rock position. Alberta then came up with a double take out but the local foursome was still in number one position. Burke edged his shotstone closer on the next throw and stayed at the 9 o'clock mark on the 12-foot circle. Alberta just missed a double take-out with its last rock and allowed Burke to count one and take an 8-4 lead in the match.

BIG TROUBLE FOR BURKE

The eleventh end saw the Burke rink allow itself to be placed "behind the eight ball".

When Art came up for his first delivery, the Alberta team had stones in all the first four positions. Art made a fine shot and knocked the Alberta team's number one stone out and stayed for shot rock position at the 3 o'clock mark on the 8-foot circle. The Alberta skip then removed Burke's shot rock and rolled to the 10 o'clock spot on the 12-foot circle.

Art then made a miss which almost cost the Island team their hard-earned victory when he attempted a double knock-out and his stone was too heavy with the result that he knocked out his own number two, leaving the Alberta rink lying three and a chance to count four with their last stone and tie up the game, which they promptly did.

The twelfth end kept the capacity crowd clinging to the edge of their seats as the teams were battling to a yet unpredictable climax. Things looked bad for the Islanders when on their third delivery the rock came down narrow and missed a possible double take out. Alberta's next throw for a guard was a little wide and left the shot rock open to some extent. Dillion's delivery knocked out the the Alberta number two and rolled out. Alberta placed a guard on their shot rock. Allan Smith took the Alberta shot stone and stayed at 9 o'clock in the 8-foot circle for number one, The Alberta team pulled the same shot and regained the shot rock position. The Island team then threw wide in an attempt to take out the shot rock. Northcott drew to the 1 o'clock mark on the edge of the 12-foot circle to block up the opening at the shot stone. Burke took out the guard and rolled to 8 o'clock just biting on the 12-foot circle.

Alberta's next throw was a little lighter than desired and came to rest at the 11 o'clock mark on the twelve. Burke knocked out what he considered to be shot rock and counted one point for the end, to climax a thrilling game and send the local fans home singing the praises of the Charlottetown curlers who had just played a tremendous game and defeated Alberta 9-8.
