A BICYCLE PROBLEM.

She had not attended his church very long, but was already one of its active workers, though not admitted to membership. Miss Vance, one of the most devoted members of his little flock, had brought her and introduced her as her friend, and the young people had speedily taken her up.

She had already presided at the flower booth at the church fair, "herself the fairest flower among them," whispered little Mr. Smith, who was sentimental. She had sung sweetly at several entertainments and taught a class in the Sunday-school.

The young minister had welcomed her gladly. He had felt her appreciation of his sermons and had seen response in her bright face to all his finest thoughts. Then, too, she was a pleasant picture to look at, with her piquant face, surrounded with its halo of golden hair.

He knew little about her family, except that her mother was an invalid and her older brother a physician practicing in the neighborhood.

He was a pastor of a little, straggling congregation in one of our large western towns. The church had at last secured a foothold, and was trying to build a suitable edifice. The young minister had come to them the winter before, fresh from one of the eastern colleges, full of ardent zeal for his work, and his spiritual face and eloquent words seemed to promise well for the future of the little church. He was anxious to make converts, and secure new members, and had been hoping to induce Miss Alice Maywood to unite with the church and thus identify her charming personality still more closely with the work, when something happened which cooled his ardor in this direction and, indeed, left him puzzled as to what course to adopt with regard to this peculiar young lady.

One bright spring morning as the minister walked slowly along one of the streets on the outskirts of the town, drinking in the fragrance of opening leaf and flower, he beheld an apparition. Coming rapidly toward him, perched airily on the seat of a new bicycle, was Alice Maywood, her golden head shining in the sunlight under her jaunty cap, her cheeks glowing. The minister gasped as the girl saw him and bowed, returned the salutation, too dazed to raise his hat, for the navy blue costume she wore, with its prettily fashioned Eton jacket, was certainly made with a skirt; no, it wasn't a skirt at all, it was bloomers!

As the minister gathered himself together a sensation of annoyance predominated in the mixed feelings in his breast. The costume was not a new one to his sight—indeed it was quite common in the city streets—but he had regarded the wearers as bold, unwomanly creatures, who were seizing upon a pretended reform to attract attention to themselves. It had now come home to him as a personal problem to settle to his immediate circle.

It was an outrage, he thought, getting more indignant as he went on; as she had seemed so different, so quiet, modest and refined. Someone ought to talk to her. What could her mother be thinking of. He couldn't say a word! The young man blushed at the idea. "Now Gertrude would never—of course not." He grew uncomfortably warm about the ears at the mere suggestion that Gertrude would do such a thing. Then the object of his disapproval glided out of his mind as quickly as she had come in. The stern lines of his face softened and he took up his day dream where he had left it.

Next fall when the new church was done he would go east and bring Gertrude, and what good couldn't he accomplish with such a woman for an inspiration and helpmate? And his thoughts dwelt lovingly upon the perfection of the sweet, gentle young woman who was going to give up her friends, her high social station and many advantages in the east and come with him to the wild west, as he called it, to aid him with her culture and with her wealth, with herself.

So during the long summer he worked hard and earnestly, upborne by the thought of success and Gertrude, and in the great struggle all minor difficulties slipped out of sight. Alice Maywood still gave her services freely and fully to the little church; still taught the little ones and spoke kindly and smilingly to young and old, rich and poor alike, and still took her daily bicycle ride, clad in her natty bloomer suit, seeming to gain added strength and health thereby. But the minister fairly disliked her when he saw her skimming gayly by in her novel attire, especially as some of her acquaintances had followed her example.

If any disapproving matron or maid spoke to her about her costume, she invariably replied that she and her family considered it the only safe and sensible costume to wear on a wheel, and that she intended to wear it.

Only to Molly Vance did she unbosom herself further. Poor Molly lay flat on her back, "laid up for repairs," she expressed it, and Alice had stepped in to bring her some sunshine and news from the world outside. She had come in from a long ride on her wheel, and Molly said she looked like a relic of the Midway.

"So you and the minister don't like my suit, Molly, dear," she said. "I am surprised at him, for I thought he was an up-to-date young man."

"Oh, no," answered Molly; "he is old-fashioned in his notions; you mustn't mind him."

"I don't said Alice, cheerfully. Then she said earnestly:

"Molly, the customs of the world have always been hard on women. The natives of Ceylon hang heavy rings in their noses; the Turks shut them up in cages; the Chinese dwarf their feet, and the modern Americans and Europeans compress their waists and hang heavy skirts on their hips. But let any of them step out, be it ever so little from the beaten track of custom and point to a better path, where comfort and freedom from disease may be had, and I promise you they will suffer."

After this long and somewhat serious speech from this young lady, she tossed up her cap, caught it on her head and said farewell, and this was the only sign she gave that the criticism passed by a few of her acquaintances hurt her.

The days sped rapidly by and the new church was completed. The minister went back to the east for his bride, returning in a few weeks for the dedication, feeling himself the happiest of men. His ... with all the ... enthusiasm into all his plans, and he perceived with pleasure that his people received her warmly and took her at once into their hearts.

One day shortly after arrival, as they were preparing for church, Gertrude said: "John, what a charming girl Miss Maywood is!"

"Yes," said John, absently. Then a cloud crossed his brow. He would tell Gertrude; perhaps she could think of something to do, so he said:

"Gertrude, that girl rides a bicycle and wears bloomers when she rides."

"Does she?" said his wife. "Well, I think it must be a much more comfortable suit to ride in than a skirt." John stared.

"Do you know," continued she, unconsciously. "I've always been dying to ride a wheel. You ride, don't you dear?"

"Yes," said John, slowly.

"And next year I'll get one, too, and we'll scour the country together. It will be good exercise for both of us."

"But," he faltered, "you won't wear——"

"Bloomers?" asked Gertrude. "Oh, yes, so much easier to ride in, and safer, too."

The minister rubbed his eyes.

"John," she said with a sigh, as she arranged the heavy haircloth lined skirt and fastened her tight waist, "I'll be glad when women dress more sensibly."

The minister did not say much on the way to church, but he thought a great deal, and as Alice Maywood passed him at the door the thought popped into his head that perhaps he had been a little too hard on her. Gertrude thought she was all right, and Gertrude had sound sense, he was sure.—Chicago News.

HOME-MADE BAROMETER.

Simple and Cheap Contrivance by Which Anybody Can Weigh Air.

There is one atmospheric phenomenon about which there is a wide misconception. When the smoke lies close to the surface of the earth, instead of moving upward, as it generally does, many people thing it is because the air is heavy. The same people will tell you, perhaps, that damp air is heavier than dry air, for it is on days that the air is damp that the smoke lies close to the earth. On the contrary, damp air is lighter than dry air, and it is because the air is damp that the smoke does not ascend. It is purely a question of gravity, not of weight. If the lower stratum of air is heavier than the smoke, the latter will go up; if it be lighter than the smoke, the smoke will not go up so readily. The barometer is the instrument used by the scientists to determine the relative weight of the air. As is usually made, it consists of a cup of mercury, with which is connected a graduated glass tube. From the upper part of this tube the air has been exhausted, thus forming a vacuum, and the height of the column of mercury in the tubes denotes the weight of the atmosphere.

The explanation of this is quite simple. The pressure of the atmosphere upon the mercury in the cup forces the mercury up into the tube, where it meets no resistance, because the empty part of the tube is vacuum. Hence the column of mercury will rise or fall in the tube as the pressure is greater or less.

Everybody is familiar enough with weather reports to know that we have "high barometer" on clear, dry days, and "low barometer" on damp days; that the first indicates good weather, and the last stormy weather. But "high barometer" means that the column of mercury is well up in the tube, and "low barometer" that it is down. We knew, therefore, that as dry air bears down more heavily upon the mercury in the cup, than damp air, it must be heavier than the damp air. A very simple and serviceable barometer may be made at home, without cost. The only things needed are a wide-mouthed glass jar,—a pickle jar will do—a clean Venetian oil flask, and half a pint of plain water. Pour the water into the jar, letting it come to within one-third of the top, and insert the oil flask upside down in the jar, so that the neck of the flask will enter the water. That is all.

If the atmospheric conditions are favorable to clear, fine weather, the water will rise in the flask; if, on the contrary, a storm is in prospect, the water will fall. The air affects the water just as it does the mercury in the tube.—Philadelphia Times.

Shapely Hands.

There are hands, long, slender, nervous ones, that nature meant to hold the brush or pen; there are others a little shorter, but with very slender tips, that can touch the keys of the piano, or do anything that requires quickness of motion. There is the fat, dimpled hand that is expressionless, though it may be affectionate, and there is the short, square one that bespeaks determination of will, a taint of coarseness, and a temper that will smoulder like a dull fire and break out and rage some day.

Trust a woman who sits with her thumbs up; she may be determined, but she is truthful. The one who conceals her thumbs is apt to be deceitful and untruthful. Look at the thumb if you want to judge of people's intellectual strength, for the longer it is, proportionately, the stronger the brain. Brooklyn Citizen.

Will the Bicycle Supersede the Horse.

In spite of the frequency of the allegation that the bicycle has superseded the horse, there seems to be just as many driving accidents this season as usual. It seems, indeed, as if there were rather more than usual, so that the possibility suggests itself that the horse gets somewhat less exercise than in former years, and is friskier in consequence. In considering the effect of the bicycle mania on the popularity of the horse, it is worth while to remember that not one person in ten who rides a bicycle now ever owned a horse, or ever was an important patron of a livery stable. To most bicyclists the bicycle is not a substitute for other means of locomotion, but is a clear gain, giving them a means of going where they will, whereas before they had practically no such means except their own legs and the street cars. People who can afford to keep horses for pleasures seem very generally to continue to keep and use them, though, to be sure, they have bicycles too, and their horses have rather more idle days than they used to have.—Harper's Weekly.

Like the Touch of Magic

Desperate Itchings of the Skin Allayed by Chase's Ointment—The Recognized Skin Specific.

It is only a few months since Dr. Chase's Ointment was brought prominently before the public, principally by its cures of stubborn and long standing cases of Itching Piles that had defied all other treatments. To day it is recognized from ocean to ocean as an infallible cure for Itching Piles, Eczematic Eruptions and all Itching of the Skin. Its cures have rendered its sales larger than those of all other preparations for such ailments combined. People use Dr. Chase's Ointment with confidence, because in every community someone has been benefitted like Mr. Simpson, Berlin, Ont., who, under date of Feb. 8, '95, writes that for a number of years he was troubled with Itching Piles; they caused intense suffering, and although dozens of advertised remedies were used, none of them did any good although some of them had long and thorough trials. Here are his own words quoted from his letter. "Last fall I got a box of Chase's Ointment from Mr. Landreth's drug store, Berlin. I applied according to directions and soon found it was what I wanted. Only used part of one box when I was well as ever in my life. Once in a while since I have felt slight symptoms of its return, but one application of the Ointment and all is right again."

Such expressions as this from those who use Chase's account for its popularity.

PRIVATELY DISCUSSED.

Montreal Physicians beginning Largely to Prescribe a New Remedy.

Montreal, July 15.—There is still a good deal of talk here among all classes over the recent despatches which appeared in so many Canadian papers, relative to the cure of Mr. G. H. Kent, of Ottawa, from Bright's disease. Although the merits of the case have not been openly discussed at any of the meetings of the medical society, there has been a good deal of private conference and the impression which the report of the recovery has made is evidenced in the fact that a good many physicians have prescribed Dodd's Kidney Pills in their private practice. No higher testimony than this could be given to any remedy, the reluctance of medical men to admit any good in proprietary medicines being well known."
