STALL AND TIE.

Model on Which There is No Patent or Private Right.

Mr. A. D. Baker of New York furnishes to Hoard's Dairyman the following drawings of a dairy cow stall and tie which he finds more convenient than any other he ever tried.

Mr. Baker describes the arrangement as follows:

A A are two pieces of 2 by 4 (wider staff may be used if a wider stall is desired) 8 feet 8 inches long, fastened to the floor. B is a board 8 inches wide, nailed to uprights to make back side of manger. C C are two pieces, made by cutting a 12 inch board diagonally, fastened to the edges of the uprights to hold them rigidly in place and form a V shaped opening into the manger. D D are two three-eighths inch iron rods, 2 feet long, with holes through the flattened ends to receive one-quarter inch bolts and set out one-half inch by blocks. E is a light, tough piece of wood fastened to D and D by heavy band iron bent in the shape of a long U, with two holes for rivets to fasten same to ends of wooden rod. Instead of this band iron one may use the irons that go in the heads of harness traces next to the hames, heat, spread and rivet to the rod.

DAIRY COW STALL.

F is a swivel connecting the chain or rope, H, that encircles the cow's neck, with a ring on the rod, E. G G are the partitions running back from the uprights, A A, as shown, bracing them and separating the cows, so that they cannot injure each other's teats or udders.

The floor can be made any length required. I use two thicknesses of inch boards instead of 2 inch plank and lay them so as to break joints, thus preventing any leakage of liquids.

There is no patent on this tie or stall.

The editor of Hoard's Dairyman says: We have taken the liberty to add to Mr. Baker's sketch and directions the piece, K in front of the uprights, to still further brace them and to prevent the cows from stealing hay or grain from each other. This piece should be made, like the pieces C C, by ripping a 12 inch board or plank diagonally from corner to corner.

The dotted lines in the cut represent the parts which are supposed to be hidden from view by the partitions.

Epidemic Abortion.

We found ourselves struggling with this dread epidemic, for at that time it was prevalent in numerous herds throughout this section of the country. The first premonition of impending evil was when, on Nov. 19, one of our most valuable cows gave premature birth to a calf that lived for a few hours. From that time symptoms of the disease developed rapidly until nearly every animal in the herd was affected. The situation was serious, for we had never before been troubled by even a single case and were unprepared to wrestle with it. However, "a drowning man will catch at straws."

To each afflicted cow 1 1/2 teaspoonfuls of chemically pure carbolic acid was given daily. The acid was diluted with water until when a drop was touched to the human tongue it would not burn. As some difficulty was experienced in trying to give it as a drench, it was mixed with the regular grain feed and that way taken readily. The hind quarters of each cow were carefully bathed daily with carbolic acid wash and the barn thoroughly disinfected. Although we had provided ourselves with a large bottle of laudanum and black haw to use in urgent cases, we had no occasion to resort to the latter treatment, for by faithfully following the other we believe we have stamped out the disease, as all symptoms have disappeared, and one of the cows that at one time was expected hourly to abort has just dropped a vigorous, full time calf.—J. E. K. in Breeder's Gazette.

Flavor In Butter.

In my capacity as a buyer of butter and judge of butter manufactured at our company's creameries, extending over the last six years, I have discovered to my satisfaction that with few exceptions the foreign flavors found in butter are caused from off flavored milk. The exceptions are:

- From leaky cream vats, which allow foul water to pollute the cream.
From an unclean churn.
From tainted salt.
From improperly prepared butter color.
From foul well water used for soaking tubs and washing butter.

In some instances the milk has become tainted from the food consumed by the cows. However, I have concluded from careful comparison of my many discoveries of foreign flavor of butter, that by far the larger number of foreign flavors found in fresh made butter is due to the milk becoming tainted after it has been drawn from the cow.—George D. Mansfield.

THE FUTURE OF SPOILED CHILDREN.

The observer who has seen a generation pass appreciate better than younger people can, what it costs a child to spoil it. It is not only well for a child to be a nuisance—that is, for the child—as long as there is an adoring parent to fall back upon, and a home to tyrannize over. Thus shielded and surrounded, every tendency of selfishness, egotism and pride can be fully developed until the spoiling of the whole character is successfully accomplished, and the uncontrolled child becomes an uncontrolled adult. But when the world steps in—the great, wide, careless inexorable world, which cares nothing for any one person's whims and passions, which requires certain qualities worthy of admiration before it will admire, and which is, in the main, a just world in awarding its struggle on or indulgence. Into its struggle a self-willed, pampered, spoiled, or woman must plunge untrained, unformed, often totally handicapped. The shock of the discovery that no one cares particularly what they think, that no one admires, or even notices, their pet qualities, that every one re-enters their self-indulgence and contrarities, is a tremendous one, and many of them are soured permanently at the outset. They become people who have a grudge against the world, who proclaim themselves un-understood and unappreciated by all, who criticize others bitterly and continually, and who quarrel constantly with those whose unhappily fate it is to be connected with them. A spoiled girl who is not a success in society, a spoiled wife who is disappointed in her self, a spoiled mother who is disappointed in her children, a spoiled man whose failures, well-deserved, have embittered every thought, a spoiled valetudinarian whose claims on public sympathy have worn it out—we all know such people, and we cannot help pitying the helpless, bitter revolt of their un-disciplined souls against the inevitable neglect the unshaken justice of the world.

Surely the parent that leaves his child, as a result of false kindness, unfit for the battle that must come, and "asked to his enemies" is either blind or cruel beyond belief. True parental love is not indulgent but guidance, and the children of a weak mother will never rise up and call her blessed.—The Interior.

Mackerel Fishing In the Isle of Man.

Although schools of mackerel are often caught in nets in the bays and inlets of the Isle of Man, yet the common way of fishing is with lines strolled over the stern of an open boat. These boats are about 16 feet long and are sailed with a jib and mainsail. The fishermen go out alone in the stormiest weather and manage their little boats splendidly. They use a piece of shiny mackerel skin for bait, and, standing up in the stern, take the tiller between their knees and handle the lines at the same time. Frequently the fisherman will pull in 200 fish on the same tack. By using two lines, if they run into a school, they keep one fish always on the line and the rest follow until all are hauled in. Besides being such hardy seamen, the Manx fishermen are God-fearing men. Even in a bad season, if a school of fish comes into the bay on Sunday, the fishermen will not cast a net or throw a line until after midnight.—New York Sun.
