ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

"I wish" — there was a longing in the words of a farmwife the other night — "between haying and harvest we had time to take a trip away. I'd like to go where I could see something. I get so tired of looking at the fields and trees and the shore. When I see cars pass heaped with the luggage of travel, why," she chuckled, "I want to go too!"

But at Alderlea, in this old house settled against a hillside, we look out upon lovely things, fine pasturals of summer now, picturing every content. Our regret is that one lifetime is much too short to enjoy the scenes and interests about.

This week took the farmers to the work of putting fields and in good order, the better to enjoy the delights of the annual Old Home Week in town, the end of which is now being written. They fenced a bit, and weeded turnips and cleaned and bedded sties. And in a fascinating chore, they with a mare and cart brought in the cordwood to winter-shelter in the shed.

How satisfying it was to have this one before the spell of fine weather gave way to that dull and damp. And how pleasant is wood fire! "There is a belief among many solitary woodsmen", someone has said, "that every color or tint to which a tree is exposed during its life glows in the fire when the tree is burned. Look

You Can Do It Yourself

By ELEANOR ROSS

Our electrical appliance service man has been telling us that he hates the telephone. So many of the anguished calls for help that come over the wire are unnecessary, and so often it is that he dashes out only to find that what is wrong, if anything, could have been righted with just a little commonsense.

He said that often an appliance has been accidentally disconnected.

As for the instructions worked out by manufacturers, a thorough study of these often makes it unnecessary to call a service man. Then, there are the complaints about automatic dishwashers. Trouble here it is said, is often because the wash water is not sufficiently hot. If your hot water supply is not what the manufacturer or your dishwasher expects it to be, better have it corrected.

When stains or film appear on dishes that have been washed mechanically, the condition of the water is only too often responsible. Reddish or brownish stains may come from iron in the water. Lime film can be almost any shade, from creamy white to an ugly greenish brown.

Here is one instance when a call to the service man is recommended. Once the stain has been identified by him, he can suggest the necessary antidote—chlorine bleach, vinegar or oxalic-acid crystals.

LET'S EAT

High Protein Content In Low Cost Sardines

By Ida Bailey Allen

State O'Maine Sardines serve as an excellent accompaniment to the opening course of a well-balanced luncheon with vegetable nibblers, fresh fruit, citrus juice.

"Look, Chef!" I exclaimed. "See that big hero sandwich the counter-man just put together? It's made with sardines, five of them—a whole canful. Let's see what the customer buys to eat with it."

We watched the rugged man in shirt sleeves as he pushed his tray along the cafeteria trayway. He added a raw vegetable salad and a tall glass of frosty citrus juice.

"Perfect complements to the rich flavor of the sardines," observed the Chef.

"And he has a well-balanced luncheon, too. For a can of Maine sardines, when drained from the oil, contains as much protein as a big serving of meat, yet they are very inexpensive."

"As a Chef, I also approve of sardines as an opening course—drained from the oil, well-chilled and served on tomato slices or a wedge of lettuce, with a sprinkle of pickle relish and a garnish of lemon twists."

"And as a really hungry home economist, Chef," I replied, "I approve of a sardine hero sandwich for lunch this very minute."
