BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified by pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE CRUEL CHECK REIN.

MAN'S GREAT INHUMANITY TO THE HORSE.

An Enumeration of the Many Evils Resulting From the Use of the Check Rein.

We practice many cruelties on the horse. We underfeed and overwork him, expose him to cold and wet, work him in ill-fitting harness, compel him to stand in a narrow, dark and uncomfortable stall, annoy his eyes with blinders, jerk his mouth and whip him.

But all these things put together do not hurt like the check rein.

That portion of the spine in the neck is, in a horse, as in a man, very sensitive. If a man's neck be forced into any constrained position and held there, the keenest suffering quickly follows.

If a horse's head be fastened down a foot below its natural place, he will suffer, but not a tenth part as much as he will if you compel him to hold his own head a foot above its natural place. In this case, within five minutes he begins to suffer, and you may see in his face and in his efforts to release his head how great that suffering is.

First, he will try to relieve himself by letting the weight hang upon his bit. Soon he will carry his head far round on one side and let it hang there a moment; then he will carry it around on the other side, then bring it in front, and throw it up high two or three times. These three movements—the only possible ones he will continue until the head is released.

How any man can witness this spectacle, without being touched, is a mystery.

The greatest strain is felt in the muscles on top of the neck, just under the collar. The muscles at that point become inflamed and weak, and are at length so reduced in size that an unseemly hollow is produced at that point.

Another common effect of the use of check-reins is stiff shoulders and weak knees. If we leave his head free, his shoulders and knees rarely give way. I have studied the influence of the check-rein a long time. For years I have observed in New York city that the car and omnibus horses, although they work hard and on the hardest pavements, very rarely become stiff forward, because their heads are free while, even in the country, livery horses wearing tight check-reins are almost sure to become stiff.

In Paris I attended for some time the cliniques in a large horse hospital. The lecturers very frequently alluded to a very old gentleman, constantly seen about the premises, as the wisest man upon diseases of the horse in the world.

At the front door this old gentleman said to a company of students, "Do you see that baker's horse? What do you suppose was the cause of those stiff shoulders and trembling knees?"

"Hard pavements," I suggested.

"Overdriving," said another.

"Hard pavement and overdriving are bad for the shoulders and knees," replied the old surgeon, "but, gentleman, the horse is so perfectly made that if you take off that check rein he will stand a vast deal of hard driving on hard pavements without harm. Gentlemen, come back into the yard, and I will explain. Here, boy, bring that horse this way. Now, young gentleman, these shoulders, this long neck, and this head, together make up a wonderful structure. The Creator seems to have known how to make all these parts and put them together, and, I fancy, He has taught each horse how to carry his head. You see, there are a great many bones and ligaments, and tendons and muscles, and these all work into and with each other, like the various parts in an orchestra. In some horses the natural position of the head is high. In that case all these bones and ligaments and tendons and muscles in the head and neck and shoulders are fitted to a high head, and they work into and with each other in a natural and easy way, with the head carried high. But, in the great majority of horses, the natural position of the head is low. Now, in this case, all these bones and ligaments, and tendons and muscles, in the head and neck and shoulders, work into and with each other in a natural, easy and comfortable way only when the head is carried low. If such a horse's head is fastened above its natural place, you will see at once that all these bones and ligaments and tendons and muscles, instead of playing into each other in their natural and comfortable way, must work in an unnatural, strained way, and must produce friction, fatigue and pain.

"When a man leaps from a height, he relieves the shock with bent legs and the elastic substance between the bones of his spine. When a horse comes down hard on one or both of his forelegs—for example, when he steps into an unexpected hole, there is no bent leg or elastic substance to mitigate the shock. But nature has provided the animal with a perfect protection in this long neck with its free movements. Suppose, for example, the head and neck were one solid, stiff bone, and fastened to the shoulders in some firm, inflexible manner. Now suppose the horse is trotting along and steps down six inches lower than he expected, don't you see what a fearful strain the shoulders must suffer, and how soon the shoulders and knees must become sore and weak? Will any of you tell me how this head and neck, fastened up by a strong check-rein, differs in its influence on the shoulders from the solid, stiff bone that I described? The check-rein produces more stiff shoulders and weak knees than all other causes put together."

And then the old man went on to add many arguments against the check-rein, and I remember he asked us whether we supposed the horse could see the road just in front of him as well when his head was a foot or a foot and a half above its natural place.

Try This, Children.

Fasten a nail to a string; suspend it from your thumb and finger, and the nail will oscillate like a pendulum. Let some one place his open hand under the nail and it will change to a rotary. Let a third person place his hand on your shoulder, and the nail will become stationary.—Allentown Pa. National Educator.

Potato Balls.

Moisten two cupfuls of cold mashed potatoes with one-half cupful of hot milk and when softened stir in two salted well-beaten eggs. Drop carefully from a spoon into flour, or egg and crumb them, the mixture should be very soft, and brown either in hot butter or boiling fat.

Found a Rich Gold Mine.

LOWER JORDON BAY, N. S., July 3.—Mr. Samuel Locke, of this place, has just discovered a gold mine here that pans out 100 per cent. of pure metal to the ton. It was a rich vein of sound health to which he was restored, by the use of Dodd's kidney pills, and which he would not exchange for any other mine in America. All last winter he suffered from kidney trouble which would not yield to the prescriptions of several doctors. A few months ago Mr. Locke heard of the good work done by Dodd's kidney pills and tried them with the invariable result. To-day he is well and thinks no praise too great for this wonderful remedy. His neighbors are much interested in what they describe as a marvelous cure.

THEY WILL NOT LEARN THE DUETS.

Mr. Scraper and Miss Tonsilitis Make a Decidedly Embarrassing Discovery.

She was pretty, wore a huge hat, and carried a music roll; he wore a cluster of violets in his buttonhole and his cane stamped him as something of a dandy. He dropped into a seat beside her in a Clark street car.

Why, Miss Tonsilitis, this is a great pleasure, I am sure."

"Why, Mr. Scraper, is it really you? What an age since I saw you."

"Yes, indeed, I've been wanting to call, but——"

"We've moved into a new flat, you know."

"Have you? So have we; I'm boarding with my brother now."

"Are you? I was thinking of you the other day. Do you play the violin as delightfully as ever? It was always a treat to hear you."

"Thanks, awfully; yes, I'm practicing hard just now."

"You must come to see me and bring your violin. There is a young man in the flat above us who plays the violin until I wish I was stone deaf. He scrapes and saws until it sets all your teeth on edge, and I just have to sing to drown the noise. No wonder the flat under him was vacant."

"How dreadful! Can't they make him stop? I am learning the 'Angels' Serenade' now."

"Are you? Do come and play it for me; he would never try it again, I'm sure, if he once heard you play it—he is murdering it all the time now. We've complained to the janitor in vain."

"Thanks, I will, and you must sing for me, you have such a lovely voice. I wish you could hear the girl in the flat below us—her voice is so sharp I know she went to a boarding school and lived on lemons and pickles."

"Really, people like that ought to be restrained by law. I am learning the 'Jewel Song' from 'Faust' now."

"Are you? It will be a treat to hear you sing it after that awful girl in the flat below us."

"Well, come soon and I'll sing it for you. This is my street."

"And mine, too; we must be neighbors. How nice."

"Why, yes, we must really learn some duets."

"We must, indeed."

"This is where I live, won't you——"

"Why, I live here, too!"

"Is it possible that you——"

"You don't mean that——"

"Good afternoon, Mr. Scraper."

"Good day, Miss Tonsilitis."

They have never learned those duets yet, and in one flat building on the North Side the "Jewel Song" and the "Angels' Serenade" are silent forever.

The Good Man Surprised.

A young lady organist in a church in Colorado was somewhat captivated with the young pastor of the church in the next street, and was delighted to hear one week that by an exchange he was to preach the next Sunday in her own church. The organ was pumped by an obstreperous old sexton, who would often stop when he thought the organ voluntary had lasted long enough. This day the organist was anxious that all should go well, and as the service was about to begin she wrote a note intended solely for the sexton's eyes. He took it, and in spite of her agonizing beckonings carried it straight to the preacher. What was that gentleman's astonishment when he read:

"Oblige me this morning by blowing away till I give you the signal to stop."

Struck the Wrong Lead.

Smith—May I make a confidant of you?

Jones—Why, certainly.

Smith—Well, I'm hard up and want $50.

Jones—You can trust me; I am as silent as the grave. I have heard nothing.

Mr. Figg—No. When?

Tommy—W'y, I don't suppose a nail could be driven if it was lead.

Those Funny Tots.

In the public schools there are many pupils to whom furnace-heated buildings are a novelty, and the word "register" seems too much for them to remember. Not infrequently it is called "the refrigerator," but a New England youngster in school has capped the climax by asking, "Please may I sit on the janitor?"

Mothers,

Does the housework tire you?

If so, ask yourself the reason why.

Is there a means by which the WEARINESS and the WEAKNESS and the DREAD can be removed?

Do the words of friends and the experience of others influence you? There is reason why they should. They are constituted as you are. Relief to them is relief to you.

The case of Mrs. Elizabeth Hamilton, of Milford, St. John, has many a parallel.

Consider it.

This lady, whose portrait appears above these lines, suffered four years from that common complaint, Dyspepsia—accompanied, of course, by its train of ill—flatulency, constipation, nervousness, loss of appetite.

And she tried eight physicians during that time.

Last autumn she was induced to "experiment" with a popular local remedy—"Groder Syrup." Of this medicine she says: "It has helped me as nothing else ever did; it made my work lighter and easier because it regulated my stomach and GAVE ME NEW LIFE.

Does such evidence appeal to you? It should. There is health and healing in this remedy for Dyspepsia. Disordered stomachs are the direct cause of countless ills that kill.
