SPECIAL DESPATCHES TO THE EXAMINER.

McMULLEN AIRING HIS CON- SISTENCY.

Wants Ministers to Fulfil Pledges.

Abolition of Superannuation.

OTTAWA, Jan. 22.—Mr. McMullen, M. P. is here interviewing the Ministers and urging them to give effect at the coming session of parliament to their ante-election promises. He expects a five months' session and says that if the government does not introduce a bill to abolish superannuation in the civil service he will.

CHINA AND THE CHINESE LOAN.

Want it Without Guarantees.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—This morning's papers comment editorially upon the menacing aspect of affairs to China. Despatches from Paris say the report is current there that China is trying by the offer of high interest to obtain a loan without the assistance and without the guarantees that Russia and England demand.

OPERATION OF THE DINGLEY TARIFF.

Felt Heavily in Italy.

ROME, Jan. 22.—The action of the Dingley tariff has caused a crisis in the orange and lemon trade of the Southern provinces of Italy. Prices are so low that the fruit does not pay for plucking.

Unionist Election in Dublin.

DUBLIN, Jan. 22.—A parliamentary election here yesterday resulted in the return of the Unionist candidate by a majority of 138 over his Nationalist opponent.

The Chinese Loan.

PEKIN, Jan. 22.—The prospects of the British in China are not bright. The loan will be at three per cent. it arranged.

Quebec's Lieutenant-Governor.

QUEBEC, Jan. 22.—It is expected that Lieutenant-Governor elect Jette will be sworn in on the 29th inst.

A great improvement has been made in Parisian duels. The seconds in an affair of honor between a dramatic author and one of his critics made a mistake in the place of meeting, thereby sending their principals to opposite ends of Paris. This made a subsequent meeting at close quarters unnecessary.

This is a Bookstore

Several other lines of business live under this same roof, each of them the largest of its kind in this Province. But, first and foremost, this is a BOOK-STORE, and especially it is a School Book Depot. All the authorized School and College Books are kept in stock, and a big stock of all School Requisites, and the prices are always as low as the lowest. Need we say more?

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

He Pays His Compliments to the Liberals.

HE DOES NOT THINK THEY ARE MADE FOR RULERS.

(Montreal Witness.)

"No government, in the face of an intelligent electorate, can retain power when it shows an incapacity to govern. Even if it had a settled policy which had commended itself to the people at the polls it could not retain power, if it proceeded from blunder to blunder. And the present government, which is the accident of an accident, which has no settled policy, and which has always spoken with two voices, would be deposed from power tomorrow if the whole electorate had the chance to pronounce its verdict." This is the opinion of Sir Charles Tupper, uttered this morning in his room at the Windsor Hotel with great deliberation.

Had there been a well defined policy on the part of the government upon which the entire electorate had pronounced, and had the ability to govern been displayed, there is little doubt that the Liberals might have looked forward to a long lease of power. But what are the facts? There was an attempt to please the protectionists and the free-traders at the same time; there were two voices to suit different sections of the country; there was a catch vote, which in no way represented the feelings of the people as a whole. The Conservative party had a well-defined policy when it succeeded the Mackenzie Government. The country approved that policy, and retained the party in power. Of course, it was time for a change. It is contrary to the genius of parliamentary institutions and party government that one party should retain power constantly to the exclusion of the other.

"But the Liberals wrought upon prejudice and prepossession in one part of the country; they endeavored to placate this and that section, rather than to have one voice in every constituency. They got a snap vote; they were placed in power; and ever since then the government has been doing the work of the Conservatives. If I had retained Sir Wilfrid for the express purpose," said Sir Charles, impressively, "he could not be doing my work better. He is bringing the Conservatives back to power, as though by deliberate design. He is making his own government short-lived. By-elections prove nothing. Any government in power can always secure by-elections, especially if it uses the means which this present government have not hesitated to use. But we have probably the most intelligent electorate in the world. Here and there we may notice gusts of passion which obscure the judgment, but upon the whole I do not believe any country can show so high a degree of intelligence on the part of the electorate. The issue, in my judgment, simply requires to be put plainly to the people at the first opportunity to reverse the catch vote which placed the Liberals in power. I have just come from the west and I know something of the revulsion of feeling there. I have given some attention to the general feeling of the people, and I am confident that if the government lives out its five years' term, it will not exceed it."

"It was the blundering incapacity of the Mackenzie Government which wrecked it, as much as the lack of a policy," proceeded Sir Charles. "Owing to the Pacific Railway scandal there had been a revulsion of feeling, and the Liberals came into power. But the new government proceeded from one blunder to another. In its handling of the C. P. R. question it showed the greatest incapacity. Moreover, there was the question of the tariff. We insisted that the tariff should be raised to protect our decaying industries. Sir Richard Cartwright made free trade speeches while the people were idle and languishing. I made a speech of five hours, arraigning the policy and the blundering incapacity of the government which, I make bold to say—it was then freely admitted—did more to cause the defeat of the government than any other factor. I had learned, I remember at one time, that the government had actually determined to fall in with our proposals and raise the tariff. In fact a portion of the proposed new schedule was printed. I went to Sir John Macdonald and said:

"I have bad news for you from a party point of view."

"What is it?" Sir John asked.

"The Liberals are about to raise the tariff."

"What course shall we adopt?" was the next question.

"There is only one thing to be done," was my reply. "I will get up after Sir Richard Cartwright and let the government hear the hearty support of the Conservative party. This is the only honorable course to take."

"Sir John agreed, but in the course of twenty-four hours the government changed their minds, the increase was refused, and Sir Richard continued to make free trade speeches. At the time I was credited with the ability to make a speech against the government for not raising the tariff, and another for supporting them for doing so—all in the course of twenty-four hours. The people were disgusted, and marvellous revulsion of feeling took place, which gave the Conservatives an overwhelming majority at the next election."

"Do you consider, Sir Charles, that there is inherent incapacity on the part of the Liberals, to govern?"

"I simply point to the facts of the past and the present experience."

"In the matter of governing, do you consider that the Mackenzie government displayed more ability than Sir Wilfrid Laurier?"

"I do, undoubtedly, for in the Mackenzie government we had no such blunder as that preferential trade policy which was announced with such a flourish of trumpets, the true meaning of which has since been exposed with cutting effect. We were told that only England could take advantage of the preferential trade clauses; I insisted that thirty other countries could claim the preference. The event proved that I was right. We were told that the government had studied the tariffs of other countries and their position was legal; I said the bill would not pass until the rights of other countries were provided for under the most favored nation clause. I was right again. We were told of the increased trade which would result to England; her exports have fallen off. In a word, the preferential trade policy of the government indicated either the most astounding ignorance of public affairs, or the deliberate attempt to make capital by the expression of a spurious patriotism. There was no Drummond County Railway in the Mackenzie government; there was no prime minister who spoke with two voices, as in the case of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I consider that the whole course of the government, from the moment it reached power through a catch vote to have been one series of monumental blunders, which will have a cumulative effect at the next general election. They have shown an utter incapacity to govern the country. And our electorate, understand, are different from those in many other countries. You would find in some countries no inconsiderable number of persons who could not tell you the name of the prime minister in power. With us every man understands and thinks and judges. And the incapacity of the Liberals to govern with a settled policy, the blunders they constantly make, and the fact that the prime minister is a man who has never spoken with one voice to the whole country, but has, on the contrary appealed to sections of the people diametrically opposed as to political feelings and fiscal policy,—will make for their downfall. Even if the Government had a settled policy, they would not carry it out, for they would have to placate the sections to which they appealed for votes, which sections are in opposition as to the great fiscal issues with which the country as a whole is concerned. So that, as I say, Sir Wilfrid Laurier is doing my work; restoration of the Conservatives to power; and the next general election will put a period to Liberal incapacity and blundering."
