CHAPTER 7

The papers made much ado about little Eve Wade. Relatives who had conveniently forgotten the widowed Selina and her three children descended upon them with congratulations and also with suggestions as to how the contest money should be spent. Everything in the house in Walbrook centering about Eve, her preparations for going to New York and then abroad to study.

"She can't go alone," said Iris. "You go with her, Mother. With Tommy and me working we can afford a housekeeper."

Selina looked confused. The time had come when she must choose between the fostering of Eve's talent the fostering of Iris's marriage to a man of wealth. She weighed the two carefully, her eyes guilty. Eve's success depended upon change; there was nothing certain about it. But no one could doubt Mark's growing love for Iris. To Selina Wade the prospect of being the mother-in-law of Mark Christian was far more appealing than being the inconspicuous mother and traveling companion of a potential opera star who had years of study before her yet.

She looked at Iris reproachfully. "I couldn't bear the heat of New York this summer and living in a small apartment. I've never lived in an apartment in my life. The very idea of going abroad makes me ill. You know I've never been able to travel by water. No, Iris, Eve will have to go alone. I'll write to Cousin Martha."

Eve flared. "I won't live with Cousin Martha! I want to live alone!"

"You don't have to live with her," pacified Selina. "But you can go to see her now and then. I'll feel better about you with one of the family near."

When Eve went out, Iris said, "Do you think it's wise to send her there alone? I don't think New York is terribly wicked, but she's young, she's never had any independence, she's never worked. She's going to meet a lot of temptations."

Her mother sighed. "When she goes, she won't belong to me any more. I'm trying to comfort myself by thinking that she'll be in the public eye and her voice will give happiness to so many people."

It was futile for Iris to say, "But this is the turning point of her life. She's never needed you as much as she needs you now. She needs some one to come home to in a strange city. With her moods and temperament, I'm afraid for her. Already she's changed. She feels self-important. All this publicity has gone to her head."

Without Eve's music the old house seemed very still. Selina returned to her bridge games, to making adroit bargains for Iris's clothes and to stinting on the table. Iris took up the routine of her life again, trying not to worry about Eve, and thinking about Joel and Mark and Annette Tracy.

"Mrs. Bailey has an appointment at eight," Iris reminded Dr. Tracy. "Would you make an important date tonight? I need you here to assist me."

"I have a date with my knitting needles," she returned smiling. "Then you're going to dinner with me."

Her eyes scolded him. "But Mrs. Tracy wouldn't like it. She won't know anything about it, my dear, and besides, taking one's secretary to dinner is not grounds for divorce."

At a small table in a supper club they talked about Mark and Eve. It was strange, she thought, that Joel who was so deeply involved in her life was never mentioned when almost every decision and plan of her life centered about him. In the present state of affairs Iris was afraid to look forward, seeing in the future Mark's dark eyes under the heavy dark brows, Joel both humble and surly, and the accusing eyes of Annette Tracy.

"Don't look so troubled," said Louis. "I have told Annette that Mark is pursuing you in the most gentlemanly manner."

"And she says that Mark will never marry a working girl!"

"That's what she says."

Toward the end of the meal a waiter with unsteady hands tipped the water goblet over into Iris's lap. As he apologized again and again, expecting a reprimand, she quietly excused herself and went upstairs to the dressing room.

The damage was slight. When she came out into the dimly lighted hall, she looked up startled, seeing a man and woman in a close embrace. For a moment she was amused, debating whether to hurry past or retreat to the dressing room again.

"There was time for nothing, for Annette Tracy, over a strange man's shoulder, saw Iris standing there, crimson with embarrassment.

"I beg your pardon," Iris said in a tight little voice.

"Oh, it's you!" cried Mrs. Tracy in a clipped high voice. "Now run along and tell Louis what you have seen and then both of you, scheming to get rid of me, can gloat beautifully over it."

The man touched Annette's arm. "Don't make a scene. This girl doesn't mean anything. There's some one coming up the steps."

Iris winced. Was Louis coming up the stairway?

"I can't go downstairs," said Annette. "Louis is down there."

"Well, go at once," Iris said firmly and brushed by them.

She could not look directly in Louis's eyes when she reached their table. He was slipping contentedly on a liqueur. Iris thought bitterly, "somebody else is using me for a tool. Mrs. Tracy wants to divorce Louis, wants to name me, and then collect alimony. But I can't tell him that his wife is unfaithful. I can't!"

She said casually, "My dress is soaked, Louis. I think we'd better go."

Lorne Valley And Vicinity

The Women's Missionary Society of the Lorne Valley Presbyterian Church held their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Daniel J. MacArthur. After the regular program and business of the evening was carried on, the collection was taken which amounted to a considerable sum. Two new members joined. Several visitors were in attendance. Before leaving lunch was served by the hostess.

Mr. L. W. Warren of Cardigan passes through Lorne Valley with his bus.

A Whist and dance was held in Cardigan Hall on Tuesday night, May 12th by order of Cardigan C. W. L.

A lady resident of this district recently informed the writer that her family enjoyed several meals of potatoes dug from the ground this spring. The tubers were in excellent condition she said, and were even better flavored than those harvested last fall.

Owing to excessive rainfall during the past few weeks our farmers have not been able to make much progress with their Spring seeding.

48 Station presents an active scene these days as farmers drive to and fro with various loads. Mrs. Carter unloaded five cars of lime and five cars of fertilizer. She also loaded 30 cars of farm produce. It seems as though old man depression is beaten.

Mrs. Charles MacArthur, who has been spending the past few weeks with her sister, Mrs. John Jewel of North River, has returned to her home in Lorne Valley.

We are very pleased to report that Mae, the four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Munroe MacGrath, has recovered from her recent painful injury.

Mr. Francis MacIntyre of Lorne Valley has purchased a new horse.

The Cardigan Bridge is under repair at present.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel J. MacArthur were recently in Charlottetown on business.

Mr. Reuban MacCannel, motored to Charlottetown recently.

Mr. Chester Finlayson was in Charlottetown recently on business.

Mr. John MacDonald and Thomas Burke of Ruskin left recently for the mainland.

A very interesting debate took place in New Perth Hall on the night of Thursday, April 16th. It proved to the public that New Perth had many great orators. A great audience was in attendance despite the poor roads and bad weather. The subject "Which Affords the Greater Information, Reading or Travel" was well argued by each side. The judges were unable to come to any definite decision. Mr. J. A. Dewar presided and the meeting was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem. The following is the line-up of
