Opening lead—king of clubs. The most difficult hands to play are those where declarer must make a crucial decision at the beginning of a hand, the benefits of which do not accrue until many tricks later. To plan the entire play of a hand at trick one, and to project and visualize what the position of the cards will be at, say, trick ten, is not an easy chore. Many hands arise in which declarer obtains sufficient information from the bidding, or from the early play of the cards, to lead him to a definite conclusion as to how a particular hand should be played. West's two club bid in this deal should be sufficient to alert declarer to the right line of play. Since South has two diamond losers and the chance of avoiding one of them by a successful finesse is rather slim, in light of the bidding, some thought must be given to an alternate method of escaping one diamond loser.

The answer lies in arranging to force West to lead a diamond away from his king and into the A-Q. To bring about this condition is much easier said than done, but proper planning and timing will do the trick. The club lead is taken in dummy, a diamond being discarded. South then trumps a club, the first step in setting up the ultimate endplay against West.

After two rounds of trumps, another club is ruffed. Then the A-K of spades are cashed, followed by a spade ruff in dummy. The setup is now complete. Dummy has a heart, three diamonds, and a club. South has two trumps and A-Q of diamonds.

The ten of clubs is led. On it South discards his low diamond. West wins, but he can do no better than resign gracefully. A diamond lead into the A-Q brings the hand to a conclusion, while a club lead permits dummy to ruff a declarer discards the queen of diamonds. It's just like we've said in this space before. It pays to plan the play.
