ELLEN'S DIARY

Last Day Of February—What Will The New Month Bring?

So having spent his issue of days, February goes now. He faces up the rise of fields, stopping at the summit as might, it comes to mind, one who having excursions to revisit old scenes and now homing, turns at a hill-top to look back, it maybe for the last time, upon a landscape, he has known well, before he resumes his homeward way. Mind, it would seem, crowded with memories, the whole bitter-sweet of a lifetime; the griefs and disappointments and regrets, the joys and laughter, the happiness and hopes.

Thus February pauses now briefly, feet on a moonlit hill. He looks back to the lightly white-appeared fields, and the quiet woods paths, to the dusky-flowing streams and the lonely little winter-brooks that run cozily beneath crystal coverings, off to some river or sea.

Next summer, we say we shall make pilgrimage to just such a brook, to listen once more to the happy music of its flow. Remoaning shoes, shall we not again walk barefoot over its smooth worn pebbles, the soft of its sand? And from a fir there, gather with a twig the damp of its balsam from a blister of buds, and holding this on the surface, watch rainbow colors of childhood catch and spread prettily. And wonder again if somewhere a small maid could find that faded pot of gold at a real rainbow's end.

Then we shall release the twig. And watch it float away toward the marsh and giver along a corner of what was "Malcolm's field" rainbow shades trailing. And we shall chuckle to the water-spiders that tread on magic hoofs the laughing ripples, because now in the hindsight of years we shall know there were—and are still, rainbows! treasures to be found and possessed along the miles of every way, delightful treasures—beautiful, in measure even beyond a little maid's fondest dreams.

But now February is at a hill-top, in dim shadow against the night-blue. Stars sparkle above, and on the heaven's stairs the moon smiles her pensive lady-smile. February will be recalling the sparkle of frosty mornings, the sheen of first sunshine as the new days came awake; the cold of the biting north wind, the brisk breath of that from "up the creek", the east with its blown snow, the south with its ribbons of mist.

So February has been and is gone silently. And in silence March will come by quietly, for as one has said of suchlike "It's like the night and the morning, and the sleeping and the waking and the going and the other comes and we know nothing how or where. We may scry and scrat and fend but it's little we can do after all—the big things come and go with no striving 'o' ourn." And all the while, come and go month, or week, or day, we must continue weaving faithfully on the web of life that is ours, remembering "The fabric of life is a homespun web, Each weaver fashions his own; The warp and woof are of God's own giving But the weaving is of the daily living."

is the weaver's choice alone; We must choose bright threads for the homespun web. As the shuttle is daily thrown... Until Monday — Diary—Good-night.
