ELLEN'S DIARY

"Tell me, Ellen, do you enjoy the Fair?"

"Oh yes," she smiled. "I liked it. And at times, I promised myself I would attend the Fair. And then, for there's no denying its charm, I spent several weeks."

"And what feature did you most enjoy?"

"The fine display of handicraft section. And I also found this year's art exhibit most interesting. It was never better I would say. Not that I am any authority on it but the work, which I know what pleases me!"

"And the livestock?"

"Oh yes, and the flocks. What magnificent creatures there were!"

"And the entertainments?"

"And the midway! It's excitement does something to you. You're to walk through the crowd there — to watch the faces, perhaps when trying to round up a member of the family. It's an experience in itself, not soon forgotten."

"We too, those days we came to it, much enjoyed the Fair. And the other members of the family liked to make the bare, which housed the little registered herd of cattle of this farm, a hospitable place to friends and strangers alike."

"We found the island's summer guests and came from hotel and motel. Interesting, those who"

"I've given you all, another week of mine," Angus says, of that which now closes. It goes. We look back to our memories. "Yes, it may be this anonymous one, who turns to it with a wish, is it by no means."

"Let me do something that shall take a long address from the world's end and store. And may I be so favored as to write you, to my friends and to you? Of joy's too scanty sum a little more."

Until Monday — — Diary — Good-night...
