MEETING AFRICA'S NEED
The missionaries your church supports in Africa and their African colleagues depend upon the Bible Society for their supplies of Scriptures.
Christian Africans want the Bible and are glad to pay all they can for it. Because most of them are too poor to pay cost price the Bible Society makes Scriptures available far below cost. A gift through your local Branch or P. E. I. Auxiliary will help provide Bibles for Africa.

Literature And Life

UNEXPECTED TEACHERS

The newspapers carried a story the other morning which let in new light on the habits of the lower creatures. It was about a cat and her kitten, which had been the inhabitants of a stable belonging to the Farmers' Dairy of Halifax. The building was being burned and the mother cat anxious for the safety of her little one, went in to rescue it and both were lost. Surely this was devotion that often puts us humans to shame.

Is it not somewhat humiliating to be sent to school to the lower creatures? And yet Job, in arguing with his so called comforters, tells them that they can learn from them: "But ask now the beasts and they shall teach thee, and the fowls of the air and they shall tell thee. Or speak to the earth and it shall teach thee, and the fishes of the sea and they shall declare unto thee." (Job 12:7-8).

Isaiah said to the people of his day that they were not as thoughtful as the ox or the ass, for they knew where they were fed.
John Bunyan puts the hen and her chickens in the Pilgrims Progress. We find them in the House of the Interpreter which is his picture of the church. They lift up the head when they drink as if to teach us that we should thank God for our food—in fact say grace at table. I read another story the other day in the paper which told of a child that was stuck in the mud and one dog of the family went to the home as though to tell of what had happened while the other stayed and kept watch over the little one.

Does not Wordsworth bid his sister to permit nature to be her teacher? Let Nature be your teacher. The dog has been well called man's best friend. Have we not known dogs to express their joy at their master's return—frisk and try to say how glad they were. The house to them seemed vacant while the master was absent, and they searched the rooms. A monument in Edinburgh tells how Gray's Bobby stretched on his master's grave and would not leave, no matter how persuasive the appeal. How loyal the dog is to his home.

There is a pathos all its own in the silence of the lower creature. They express by motion—the dog wags its tail to tell it is happy. The lower animals have memories. The tired horse, as soon as the harness is taken off, goes to its place in the barn. Recently in a Canadian city I witnessed a dog fight—a small dog, attacked by one much whereupon another dog, larger and independent, came along and interfered on behalf of the little fellow. The combatants were separated and then the champion of the weaker one walked off as if nothing had happened. Here was a lesson for the warlike folk of our day.

Saint Francis loved animals so did Jesus. The common cat stretched out on hearth rug gives an added touch of comfort to the home. Nature is not all red in tooth and claw. There is a tenderness in the eyes of a dog, and a loyalty to their young is a characteristic of animals that often puts us to shame.
A little child can lead and teach but so can the swallow that knows the time is come for the young to break up the nest when it thinks the time is come for the young to take the air—a rebuke to coddling parents who forget that there is such a place as the world awaiting their children.
And the little incident that suggested this article and with which I began is but another illustration of the saying of our great dramatist—
"and this our life
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in everything."

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan (Copyright)

RESPONSIBILITY OF DEMOCRACY
The United States has a presidential election this year. Some years ago this fact would not have had the importance which it has today. Some years ago the United States was not the leader of the world's democratic nations. Today she is. The man who assumes this post takes upon himself an almost incalculable responsibility both to his own countrymen and to the world. He also assumes a great responsibility for them.

Neither of the candidates publicly sought the nomination. They, apparently, had it thrust upon them. Perhaps this is all for the best because if there is one thing above all others which is demanded in public servant number one in the free world today, it is selfless devotion to a sacred trust. Moreover, what holds true for the President of the United States holds true for every public servant. They must all possess, if democracy is to survive, an all pervading sense of political integrity. But who is to guarantee this?

The recent and frequent revelations of corruption in high places have been a source of serious disillusionment to the public. In not a few minds there is a growing conviction that all public servants are crooked. They have despaired of political honesty and are resigned to accepting the least unacceptable candidate when they cast their ballot. To say the least, this is a very unfortunate state of affairs. Despair is always unhealthy.

It is common today to hear the expression "stay away from politics". If this means not to be interested in public life, not to have a personal interest in the affairs of our country then there is only one judgment that can be made. Such people fall as citizens. In a democracy such an attitude is intolerable. If democracy is to win the war she is engaged in, and make no mistake she is engaged in a very important war, every one of its citizens must be interested in politics. Standoffishness here is either a sign of immaturity or degeneracy. The public, or perhaps better, the people must be the watchdog and guardians of our political inheritance. If not, it will be stolen from them. We the people must above all look to the
