Management Expert Describes Rhythm Deal

MONTREAL (CP)—He's got rhythm, that man on the managerial totem pole.

At age 37 or 38, a wobble begins to set in along his career flight plan, as though he realizes he must expend more energy to get through the next barrier on his climb up the company pyramid.

The wobble begins at the 7½-year cycle on the executive rhythm count which dates, in many cases, from the time a man is promoted to his first managerial job.

And either he makes a breakthrough then to the higher echelons, or the wobble continues to the ninth year.

But the next 7½-year cycle has its origins not in executive year nine but traces back to when the wobble first started.

"They all begin to phase in again at about 45," management consultant Dr. Bernard J. Muller-Thym said here in talking about the management group.

As for the first wobble, he said, the adult management development programs that began in North American universities in the 1950s showed a "curious concentration" of managerial people in the 37-38 age group.

They, obviously, were being groomed for better things.

Dr. Muller - Thym, a New Yorker who has his own management consultant firm as well as being visiting professor of management at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, made his observations before an executive audience at a seminar here.

The three - day seminar on planning and executing organization change is being held by the Canadian management centre of the American Management Association, a group that provides executives in Canada with a program of management education.

Dr. Muller - Thym said the whys of rhythm and cycle are not as important as the fact that research shows they exist.

Job appraisals of managerial people showed a drop in favorable assessment after they had been 30 months on the same project, Dr. Muller-Thym said.

This was the "7½ - year block."

But rotation of experience in the various branches of a business was useful only if the employee played a managerial role in each.

Quiet Campaigning Marks Byelection In N.B. Riding

MONCTON (CP) — Rallies, television, radio and party organization work have featured quiet campaigning by the three candidates in Monday's Westmorland federal byelection. Voters of Ontario's Waterloo south will make a parliamentary choice the same day.

Participation by national party leaders is arousing more interest in Westmorland during the final week. The first to arrive, T. C Douglas of the New Democratic Party, spoke at Sackville Tuesday night and has scheduled other appearances.

Progressive Conservative Leader John Diefenbaker will be here for one speech — in Moncton High School tonight.

Spokesman for the Liberals have included Labor Minister MacEachen and Veterans Minister Teillet. John Turner, member for St. Lawrence-St. George, will address a Shediac meeting tonight.

The candidates are Henry Landry, 44, a Moncton businessman, for the NDP; PC standard bearer J. Edward Murphy, 50, prominent Moncton lawyer, and Mrs. S. H. Rideout, 41, who seeks to retain the seat for the Liberals. Her husband's death in May caused the vacancy.

Mr. Douglas told his Sackville audience that Prime Minister Pearson and Mr. Diefenbaker are "like two old bulls butting heads together" over the flag issue.

He said the NDP is ready to accept the parliamentary committee's proposal for a distinctive Canadian flag—a single red maple leaf on white background with red vertical bars.

Mr. Murphy has said the committee's majority decision is not acceptable and the issue should be decided by the people. He has charged indecision on the government's part and also said that sections of the royal commission report on transportation would be harmful to the Moncton area—a transportation centre.

Mrs. Rideout has emphasized federal government action on student loans and technical training, as well as improving employment and industrial factors in New Brunswick, helping to keep young Canadians at home.

Appeals by television and radio end Friday night. Weekend rallies are planned and a general meeting of Mr. Murphy's 600 Moncton workers will be held Saturday.

The large riding of Westmorland has about 48,500 eligible voters and 219 polls, including eight advance. Votes at these eight polls numbered 512, or 411 at three in the city and 101 in the country.

Westmorland voted Liberal in eight of the last 12 general elections. The last PC win was in 1958 Mr. Rideout had a Liberal plurality of 3,633 in the last election.

Please God just let him know

I loved and miss him so.
