De Gaulle Is Silent Over Length Of Term

By DAVID MASON

PARIS (AP) — President de Gaulle long ago wrote that a little mystery is necessary to strengthen the authority of one who desires to govern. True to this guideline, he is letting people guess how long he intends to stay at the helm of France.

The answer to this puzzler would shed some light on the biggest political question in modern France:

What happens after de Gaulle?

If de Gaulle had suddenly retired or fallen to an assassin at the height of the Algerian crisis, political chaos splashed with blood likely would have followed. Now Algeria is rapidly being pushed into history. Its backwash is far less a political factor than a year ago.

De Gaulle will be 73 Friday. If he should go today, France would still be shaken to its complex and potentially explosive political underpinnings. Under constitutional processes he would be replaced temporarily by the president of the Senate—now the strongly anti-Gaullist Gaston Monnerville, a native of French Guiana.

VOTE WITHIN 50 DAYS

The constitution provides that a presidential election must be held 20 to 50 days after the vacancy occurs, unless the constitutional council, a sort of supreme court, finds unavoidable reasons to delay the vote.

De Gaulle's Fifth Republic constitution elevated the post of president to a level of supreme importance. Article 16 leaves the way open for dictatorial powers if the president deems them necessary. One of the bitter arguments against the constitution centred around this article, with even some Gaullists expressing concern that an unscrupulous president could legally ride roughshod over the country.

The list of politicians of presidential timber seems meagre and pale. No one at this stage commands a modicum of the personal and political authority retained by the general who led Free French forces down the Avenue des Champs Elysees as Paris was liberated from the Germans.

DE GAULLE STANDS OUT

Physically and psychologically, de Gaulle's six-foot-plus frame is head and often shoulders above his compatriots. His mystic approach to his mission at the head of France shows elements of Joan of Arc and Napoleon but is original enough to become the stuff of Gaullist legend.

So far no other politician has been able to detach himself enough from partisan politics to make a convincing show that he is needed and wanted.

The Gaullists, with a majority in the National Assembly, could be thought to run a strong candidate with heavy support. But their main cohesive factor is de Gaulle himself.

If de Gaulle should step down and remain an elder statesman, his choice could have a strong edge on the field.

In this circumstance, who would have de Gaulle's blessing? Speculation centres on Jacques Chaban-Delmas, Speaker of the National Assembly, and Michel Debre, former premier.

AIDED DE GAULLE

Chaban - Delmas, 48, figured prominently in the manoeuvring for de Gaulle's return to power in 1958. He is a vigorous and dedicated politician with a home base in Bordeaux, where he is mayor.

Debre, 51, served de Gaulle for three years and three months as premier. He became de Gaulle's faithful aide even though the premiership was whittled down to what many considered errand-boy status.

He has no warm public image and his vote-gathering ability is doubtful.

If either Chaban-Delmas or Debre made it to Elysee Palace the basic tenets of Gaullist policy would probably be firmly held to, at least at the beginning.

These would include an independent nuclear role, aloofness from close integration within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, cautious development of the European Common Market and eventual loose political unity of Europe, with France playing for a lead role.

But it is doubtful in the long run whether Chaban-Delmas or Debre could show the same steadfastness as de Gaulle in standing up to the frequent disapproval of these policies from France's closest allies.

De Gaulle once said "Apres moi, la pagaille (after me, a mess)." Whether one of these men or someone else will prove him wrong remains to be seen.

Europe-Based Air Transport To Be Cut Sharply By Yanks

WASHINGTON (AP)—Striking at the dollar drain of military spending overseas, the U.S. defence department has announced a cut of 40 per cent in Europe-based air transport squadrons.

There now are five squadrons operating 76 turbine - propeller C-130 planes and piston-driven C-124s from bases at Evreux, France, and Mainz, West Germany. After July 1 there will be only three squadrons with 44 aircraft at these bases.

The Pentagon said the shift is made possible by the progressive buildup of military airlift potential which now is about double what it was in 1960. The changed deployment will not materially affect U.S. combat potential in Western Europe, the defence department holds.

It was announced that North Atlantic Treaty allies of the United States were advised in advance of the pending change.

The principal shift will send three squadrons of C-130s from Evreux to Lockbourne Air Force Base in Ohio. These units will continue to be assigned for combat duty. This move will involve 1,340 military personnel and 3,500 dependents now at Evreux.

ASSIGNED ON ROTATION

One of these regularly assigned squadrons will be replaced at Evreux by another squadron on a 60-day rotational assignment, an arrangement under which dependents do not accompany military men. This means that after July 1 all tactical air transport units in Western Europe will be on rotational status, without dependents.

To keep the troop-movement potential of the remaining European squadrons as high as possible, air cargo and peacetime air transport duties will be shifted to the Military Air Transport Service. To meet this added responsibility, M.A.T.S will about double the present 20 to 25 aircraft it maintains in Europe.

In connection with the shift of the air transport units to Lockbourne, 45 B-47 medium jet bombers will be retired from service at the Ohio base. This retirement of the obsolescent B-47s is part of a program begun in 1959 and which included the announcement last Friday of a return of about a fifth of the B-47s based in Western Europe.

Santa Slaying Case Postponed

MONTREAL (CP)—The capital-murder trial of Jules Reeves 29, charged in the so-called Santa Claus slaying of two policemen last December has been postponed until the February term of the criminal assizes.

Defence lawyer Jacques Belisle said there had not been time for phychiatrists to finisn a series of tests on Reeves, being held in the hospital wing of the Montreal Bordeaux Jail.

Reeves and two others were brought to court after the slaying of Constables Claude Marineau and Denis Brabant, felled by a hail of bullets as they arrived to answer a burglar alarm at a north-end branch of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce.

Georges Marcotte, a 32-year-old carpenter identified during his trial as the bandit in Santa Claus costume, was found guilty of capital murder last March and sentenced to be hanged. The conviction is under appeal.

The third man, Jean-Paul Fournel, chief Crown witness in Marcotte's trial, is awaiting trial.

Opening lead—five of spades.

Good card play is an orderly process backed by sound reasoning. It requires a thorough awareness of the goal to be reached, the dangers that exist along the way, and a careful selection of the plays necessary to attain the ultimate goal.

The one thing that can prove fatal in dummy play is to play by rote. It must be recognized that every hand is a new experience and that habits previously formed, which lead to automatic reactions, are not necessarily a reliable guide.

For example, take this hand where South is in three notrump and West leads a spade. It seems to be normal to win the spade with the queen and immediately attack the longest suit, clubs, but this would be the wrong way to play the hand.

In the actual case, if this were done, East would take the ace and return a spade, thus establishing West's spade suit. South would eventually be forced to take a heart finesse to obtain his ninth trick, but, when he attempted it, West would win with the king and cash his spades to defeat the contract a trick.

The fact is that the right play is to lead a low heart from dummy at trick two and finesse the queen. The certainty of building up an extra heart trick—whether the finesse wins or loses—takes precedence over the establishment of four club tricks.

If the finesse wins, declarer has nine tricks available after forcing out the ace of clubs, while if the finesse loses, he eventually gets nine tricks anyhow, because the jack of hearts becomes established as a trick in the course of taking the losing finesse.

The important difference between the two lines of play is that West cannot safely return a spade if it turns out that he has the king of hearts. He would be leading a spade into the A-J in that case.

By attacking hearts first, South prevents the dangerous opponent (East) from obtaining the lead for the killing spade return.
