

American Nuclear Power To Increase Around Asia

WASHINGTON (AP)—American nuclear power on the Pacific rim of Asia will begin moving toward a substantial increase in the next few weeks into the launching tubes of a Polaris missile and the first armed Polaris ship will be ready to head for station in the western Pacific.

This event, long planned, takes on new importance because of the political debate over the recent Gulf of Tonkin operation, the nature of orders issued and the general topic of nuclear weapons control.

The submarine Daniel Boone is due back in the Pacific next month from first tests in the Atlantic.

The new Polaris fleet support facility at Bangor, Wash., will then be ready.

The second of the expected seven Polaris squadrons for the Pacific will go onto station late this fall, by which time a forward support base with a tender and other service ships, will be at anchor at Guam.

112 MISSILES
The nuclear power of the 112 missiles in the seven submarines—15 missiles in each—will be added to the even greater potential of US-based incremental ballistic missiles of the U.S. Air Force; to the strategic weapons aboard carrier-based Polaris submarines; to the tactical-size atomic weapons available to land and carrier-based planes.

The weapons of the Polaris fleet are designed only for big scale, strategic war. They are not the tactical-size weapons which are being developed between the Johnson administration and Senator Barry Goldwater, Republican nominee for president in the Nov. 3 U.S. election.

But the standing and special orders and, particularly, the command and control system are a fundamental part of both the strategic and tactical weapons systems.

The Polaris force in the Pacific, like those on station in the North Atlantic and Mediterranean, will be on the same restraining leash.

Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara has said the command and control system for all deployed forces of the United States has been tightened through changes in administration and technological procedures. This applies to missiles and to the command and control system as well as to the Polaris submarines in the Atlantic and Pacific.

IN CONSTANT TOUCH
In the strategic phase of the command and control system, the Polaris force operates under this procedure:

At the top, Washington is linked via radio at all times with Polaris submarines on patrol. This communications linkage is through a "redundant" alternate network of radio circuits, so that if one fails another workable system is ready to take over.

Polaris submarines can receive radio signals, even submerged—as they usually are—through use of a very low frequency (VLF), the only fre-

British Fishing Goods Firm To Open Branch In Halifax

HALIFAX (CP)—Britain's biggest manufacturer of equipment for fishing vessels plans to open a branch operation in this port, base of many of the ships in Nova Scotia's deep-sea fishing fleet.

The Great Grimby Coal, Salt and Tanning Co. Ltd. plans to have its Halifax operation in full swing by Jan. 1. It will be an extension of the company's existing Canadian operation, based at St. John's, Nfld.

which does an annual business of slightly more than $200,000. A new administration office will be established in Halifax to serve as the head office of the company's operations here and in Newfoundland.

The Grimby Fishing Gear Co. of Canada is the parent company's only North American subsidiary. In England the company deals in a wide range of products.

Company officials in St. John's said the operation here is expected to be about equal to the Newfoundland operation of slightly more than $200,000. A new administration office will be established in Halifax to serve as the head office of the company's operations here and in Newfoundland.

John's but the owners say the service needed is either unavailable or too expensive there.

St. John's appears to be slowly losing the refit business and other ports—including St. Pierre on the French islands—are reaping the benefits.

B. W. Newfoundland, head of Grimby's Newfoundland operation, says the Portuguese fleet that fishes the Grand Banks "are most certainly" going to use the new port facilities be-
