DOES PUREBREEDING PAY?

Many farmers are of the opinion that purebred cattle are in many cases no better than grade cattle. This is true in some cases as, unfortunately, such an animal as the "Scrub Purebred" exists.

A "Scrub Purebred" is an inferior purebred animal, and it is such animals which should be culled rigidly from any herd regardless of the fact that the animal may be registered. When the farmer purchases an animal which is a purebred and is registered, it is no guarantee that the animal will be a good producer of milk and butterfat, or that it will be superior in type to the remainder of his herd, for indeed he may have purchased a "Scrub Purebred", or he may have "high quality" grade cattle in his herd due to the consistent use of high quality purebred bulls of one breed over a period of many years.

Regardless of the arguments which may be offered, pro and con, in respect to purebred cattle, the road to progress still lies along purebreeding, and although a breeder of purebred cattle may sometimes produce a "Scrub Purebred", an inferior purebred animal, his chance of producing an animal of superior quality is far greater than if he were not following a program of purebreeding. Not everyone can go out and buy calves of purebreeding and get into purebred cattle, but they can improve their stock by the process of "grading up" which is the consistent use of "high quality" bulls of one breed on grade cattle over a period of many years.

PURCHASING

In purchasing an animal of purebreeding a farmer should be conscious not only of the individual itself as to type, but in the case of dairy animals, he should look at the animals' near relatives, taking into consideration their type and noting closely the shape of their legs, and whether or not, if females, their udders are capacious, well attached front and rear, the quartering of the udder, and the size and placement of the teats. The purchaser should not neglect to study the pedigree of the animal, noting the type classification, milk and fat production of its ancestors.

GREATER PRODUCTION EFFICIENCY

Disease losses are costly. Experiences of the P.E.I. Veterinary Services Branch through field investigations and case histories of specimens submitted to the laboratory often show that the losses are too frequently unnecessarily high.

One livestock owner remarked that his cattle, all ages, had been scouring off and on for over a year. The animals went into the stable in good condition but by spring they were skin and bones. An immediate investigation revealed that the cattle were suffering from Cocidiosis. Treatment and necessary preventative measures were prescribed. The complete recovery of the cattle took place in about two weeks.

An other case about four months ago, a cattle owner was pasturing his young stock on another farm he had rented. After they were out for two weeks he found one dead. Another weeks time there were four more dead. It wasn't until he had lost five that he decided to contact his district veterinarian and find out the cause. It was simple blockby and vaccination early could have prevented the losses.

Poultrymen have been known to bring in the last of their living chicks to find out what caused the death of all the others. These cases may sould extreme, but they do occur and are very discouraging especially when it is known that the heavy losses could have been drastically reduced by Modern Veterinary Science.

Veterinary Science through practitioners and the laboratory can provide an acurate diagosis which is essential to using the correct drugs for the disease concerned. Working hand in hand with the livestock man, the poultry man, the nutritionist, the agricultural representative and others, the veterinarian can help greatly to reduce disease losses and provide greater production efficiency.

THE CARE OF MILK AND CREAM ON THE FARM

The principal requirements in the production of wholesome and good-flavored milk and cream are: healthy cows and attendants, wholesome feed and pure water, absence of feeds and weeds that produce objectionable flavors and odors, attention to cleaniness of utensils and sanitation of operation, prompt cooling, frequent deliveries, and protection from heat in transportation.

HEALTHY COWS AND ATTENDANTS

Milk from cows suffering from specific bovine diseases, such as tuberculosis, infectious abortion, udder diseases, etc., is unsafe for human consumption and manufacture, because of the possible presence of disease organisms in the milk. Milk or cream from such cows may harm the health and life of the consumer. Efficient pasteurization will destroy the living germs, but it will not eliminate the damaging products that may have resulted from their activities. The production of sale milk requires that those who attend to the cows and the utensils be free from germs of infectous or contagious disease.

PROPER FEED AND WATER

Besides being harmful to the health of the cows, fedding unwholesome, decayed feeds, such as moldy hay and straw, moldy silage and grain, decayed roots and root tops tend to impart to the milk and its products flavors which are characteristic of such feeds. Some feeds, such as silage, beets, turnips, cabbage, sweet clover, alfalfa when feed in large quantities give milk, cream and butter flavors which are not desirable. Such feeds should be fed six hours before milking. There are also weeds such as, wild onions, ragweed, cow-slip cause milk, cream and butter to have intensive off flavors which are difficult to remove. The surest way to prevent these flavors in milk and cream is to completely eradicate these weeds from the pastures.

CLEANLINESS

When milk and cream comes in contact with anything that is unclean, be it the cow, the milker, the stable air or utensils, it is detrimental to its quality and damage may result from the absorption of objectionable flavors and odors or from contamination with undesirable bacteria. It is therefore most important to produce milk and cream with due regard to cleanliness of premises and of all utensils and sanitary care in its handling from the cow to the creamery.

IMPORTANCE OF SYSTEMATIC CARE

The barnyard should be kept well drained and free from manure, so that the cows are not compelled to wade deeply in mud before entering the stable. The stable must be kept free from dirt, dust, cobwebs and manure, the latter should be removed at least once daily. The bedding must be clean and the stable properly ventilated to eliminate the strong animal and manure odors. Floors should be sprinkled with water before sweeping and the sweeping completed several hours before milking to give the dust a chance to settle before the milk is drawn and exposed to the stable air.

The cows must be kept clean. The udder and flanks should be wiped off with a clean damp cloth before milking. The milker should embued with a sense of cleanliness and decency to milk with clean dry hands and to protect the milk at all times from undue contamination with dust, dirt and other impurities. His idea of sanitation largely controls the presence or absence of contamination of the milk during its production. The utensils must be clean and as nearly sterile as possible. The pails, dippers, strainers, coolers, cans, etc., should be rinsed after use, with cold or lukewarm water, washed thoroughly with hot water containing some washing powder, and then scalded with boiling water or steamed if steam is available.

SANITARY OPERATION AND CARE OF CREAM SEPARATOR

The milk should be properly strained before it is separated. The separator bowl and all accessories that come in contact with the milk and cream need washing after each separation.

Impurities and remnants of milk gather on the interior parts of the bowl and if left between separation times this material starts decomposing and will contaminate the cream of the next separation, which greatly depreciates it quality. The separator bowl should therefore be washed thoroughly after each separation.

HOW TO COOL CREAM

The most ideal way to cool cream is to hold it in a refrigerator at 45 degrees F. or below. Where this refrigeration is not possible an ice-water tank properly constructed with cement or plank which will hold water at the same temperature is also ideal for keeping milk or cream.

Fresh cream or warm cream should not be mixed with old cream until it is reduced to a temperature of 45 degrees F. Patrons who have these facilities and make reasonably frequent deliveries to the creamery are usually supplying a cream of uniformly good quality. Cooling with water is twenty-one times more effective than that of air.
