THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.
CHAPTER II.
When a party set forth as maskers, or, as they are called in Scotland, guizards, to visit some neighboring laird, or rich Udaller, it Mordant could be prevailed upon to undertake the office of skudler, or leader of the band. Upon these occasions, full of fun and frolic, he led his retinue from house to house, bringing mirth where he went, and leaving regret when he departed. Mordant became thus generally known, and beloved as generally, through most of the houses composing the patriarchal community of the Main Isle; but his visits were most frequently and most willingly paid at the mansion of his father's landlord and protector, Magnus Troil.

It was not entirely the hearty and sincere welcome of the worthy old Magnate, nor the sense that he was in effect his father's patron, which occasioned these frequent visits. The hand of welcome was indeed received as eagerly as it was sincerely given, while the ancient Udaller, raising himself in his wulge chair, whereof the inside was lined with well-dressed seal-skins, and the outside composed of massive oak, carved by the rude graving-tool of some Hamburg carpenter, shouted forth his welcome in a tone which might, in certain times, have hailed the return of loaf, the highest festival of the Goths. There was metal yet more attractive, and younger hearts, whose welcome, if less loud, was as sincere as that of the jolly Udaller. But it is matter which ought not to be discussed at the conclusion of a chapter.

CHAPTER III.
We have already mentioned Minna and Brenda, the daughters of Magnus Troil. Their mother had been dead for many years, and they were now two beautiful girls, the eldest only eighteen, which might be a year or two younger than Mordant Mertoun, the second about seventeen. They were the joy of their father's heart, and the light of his old eyes; and although indulged to a degree which might have endangered his comfort and their own, they repaid his affection with a love which even indulgence had not introduced slight regard, or feminine caprice. The difference of their tempers and of their complexions was singularly striking, although combined, as is usual, with a certain degree of family resemblance.

The mother of these maidens had been a Scottish lady from the Highlands of Sutherland, the orphan of a noble chief, who, driven from his own country during the feuds of the seventeenth century, had found shelter in those peaceful islands, which, amidst poverty and seclusion, were thus far happy, that they remained untroubled by discord, and unstained by civil broil. The father (his name was Saint Clair) pined for his native glen, his feudal tower, his clansmen, and his fallen authority, and died not long after his arrival in Zetland. The beauty of his orphan daughter, despite her Scottish lineage, melted the stony heart of Magnus Troil. He sued and was listened to, and she became his bride; but dying in the fifth year of their union, left him to mourn his brief period of domestic happiness.

From her mother Minna inherited the stately form and dark eyes, the raven locks and finely pencilled brows, which shewed she was, on one side at least, a stranger to the blood of Thule. Her cheek was so slightly and delicately tinged with the rose, that many thought the lily had an undue proportion in her complexion. But in that predominance of the paler flower, there was nothing sickly or languid; it was the true natural color of health, and corresponded in a peculiar degree with features, which seemed calculated to express a contemplative and high-minded character. When Minna Troil heard a tale of woe or of injustice, it was then her blood rushed to her cheeks, and showed plainly how warm it beat, notwithstanding the generally serious, composed and retiring disposition, which her countenance and demeanor seemed to exhibit. If strangers sometimes conceived that these fine features were clouded by melancholy, for which her age and situation could scarce have given occasion, they were soon satisfied, upon farther acquaintance, that the placid, mild and quietude of her disposition, and the mental character which was but little interested in ordinary and trivial occurrences, was the real cause of her gravity; and most men, when they knew that her melancholy had no ground in real sorrow, and was only the asperation of a soul bent on more important objects than those by which she was surrounded, might have wished her whatever could add to her happiness, but could scarce have desired that, graceful as she was in her natural and unaffected seriousness, she should change that department or one more gay. In short, notwithstanding our wish to have avoided that hackneyed simile of an angel, we cannot avoid saying there was something in the serious beauty of her aspect, in the measured, yet graceful ease of her motions, in the music of her voice, and the serene purity of her eye, that seemed as if Minna Troil belonged naturally to some higher and better sphere, and was only the chance visitant of a world that was not worthy of her.

The scarcely less beautiful, equally lovely, and equally innocent Brenda, was a complexion as differing from her sister, as they differed in character, taste, and expression. Her profuse locks were of that paly brown which receives from the passing sunbeam a tinge of gold, but darkens again when the ray has passed from it. Her eye, her mouth, the beautiful row of teeth, which in her innocent vivacity were frequently disclosed; the fresh, yet not too bright glow of a healthy complexion, tinged a skin like the drifted snow, spoke her genuine Scandinavian descent. A fair form, less tall than that of Minna, but still more finely moulded into symmetry—a careless, and almost childish lightness of step—an eye that seemed to look on every object with pleasure, from a natural and serene cheerfulness of disposition, attracted even more general admiration than the charms of her sister, though perhaps that which Minna did excite, might be of a more intense as well as a more reverential character.

At Lawrence, Kansas, a marriage license has been granted to Louis Todd, aged eighty years, and Mrs. Harriet Shall, aged seventy-eight.

Literary Notes.

North's Philadelphia Musical Journal for September is without exception the best number that has ever been issued during the career of this most excellent of musical journals. Among its contents is a fine portrait and biographical sketch of Herr Maurice Leafson, a musician who recently located in this country, and is probably the greatest pianist in America. "The Raconteur" relates an interesting, though concise history of America's National and Popular songs. Louis C. Elson, the Boston critic, gives his experience on a fishing expedition; he certainly writes an amusing and entertaining letter, and through the musical season, furnishes most excellent articles on subjects most interesting to members of the musical profession. There are other interesting letters from the leading musical centers, editorial briefs, educational articles, book reviews, a musical story, by George D. Cox, entitled the "The Trombone Player's Ruse," musical news, foreign and domestic, and many other instructive and entertaining articles. It also contains four choice compositions, viz: "Dancing Fairies Schottische," "Buds of Promise March," "Sous le Balcon," and a vocal selection, entitled "Fair Mollie," making sixteen pages of the latest new music. These pieces, if purchased at any music store would cost $1.15.

The price of the Journal is only $1.00 a year. Single copy 10 cents. Published by F. A. North & Co., 1308 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, who announce that every subscriber to their publication receives $2.00 worth of music selected from their extensive list as a premium, in addition to sixteen pages of music which appear in every issue. The Journal should be in every home where music is admired.

"The last lot of Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam is nearly gone, and you can make us another shipment of twenty-five gross. We have never sold any such preparation that gives such universal satisfaction as Adamson's, and the demand is constantly increasing." Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., 38 Hanover St., Boston. Trial bottles 10 cents. ady wy 1w

About 350 people are now resident on the Island of Anticosti.

Twenty-six thousand people visited the Quebec exhibition in one day.

Bubear and Courtney have signed articles to row a three mile race, with a turn, on the Susquehanna River at Oswego, Sept. 28, for $1,000 a side.

A Bar Harbor girl, who was told by an old boatman to be sure and have her boat well trimmed, went to work and sewed two silk flounces around the gunwale.

New Haven, News:—In the matter of self-education the people are advancing. A man who won't take any other paper will take a paper of cigarettes regularly.

A vein of salt was struck at Ellsworth, Kan., on Wednesday, and has now reached a thickness of 155 feet, and the bottom has not been struck. It is pure rock salt, very strong and pronounced by experts superior to any yet discovered.

An interesting addition to the population of Calaveras Co., Cal., is promised, in the shape of a colony of Japanese farmers. Land has been bought for them near Valley Springs, and two pioneer members of the colony are already at work on it.

In the 2.24 class pacers at Springfield, Mass., last week, Joe Howe, the Nova Scotia pacer, was defeated by Lady Wilkins, owned by A. J. Welch, of Hartford. Time, 2.22, 2.20, 2.22. In the 2.21 trotting race, Prince Wilkes won in three straight heats. Time, 2.25, 2.19, 2.20.

Affidavits made by prominent Fenians of New York, Boston and Paterson, were published in New York, Sunday. They are designed to show that O'Donovan Rossa furnished the secrets of the order which were published in one of the New York dailies, Aug. 5, and which divulged Rossa is said to have charged upon others.

There is a section of country in the State of Vera Cruz, 120 miles from the city of that name, called "Heaven," on account of its climate. Its air, water and general environment are conducive of long health. A man who recently died there at the age of 154 was carried to the grave by his three sons, aged respectively 140, 114 and 110 years. To marry at 12 and 14 years of age is a common thing.

The Sydney correspondent of the North Sydney Herald writes: "Professor Sealnut, of Vanderbilt University, was in town last week. He paid a visit to the Louisville ruins, in which he was much interested. As the learned professor's chosen specialty is mineralogy, with its various ramifications, his predictions of Cape Breton's future greatness may be worthy of credence. He says that the island is inevitably destined to become one of the greatest smelting centres in the world."
