

Casey

Casey had no legs-- and, worse still, that his eerily mute dog, Finnegan, was a disembodied head. Casey attributed their condition to a freak fall in their tree house years ago, saying they concealed it on camera to avoid becoming objects of public pity.

Reporter does time for mime crime

(BS)--Barb McKella, accosted by local mime Phil Bushell, snapped and pummelled Bushell repeatedly with a handbag, say witnesses. Bushell, pronounced dead at the scene, knew the risk of mime-bashing but "never thought it'd happen to him", said friend Trent Drake. McKella, a local journalist who'd been pursuing the inside scoop on the mime community, claimed it was "time someone taught those clowns a lesson." "Mimes," Drake corrected her. "Clowns are allowed to talk." Despite her plea of temporary insanity, the jury took less than half an hour to find her guilty of mimeslaughter.

Wicker beasts stalk students

Hellish handicrafts run amok

BY TED KNIGHT

An innocent crafts assignment from the Fine Arts Studio course went horribly wrong when students discovered the wicker material they had used to weave their sculptures was irradiated by an as-yet-unidenti-

Campus Police surrounded Cass with torches, but were blocked by music students who believe the wicker beasts to be harbingers of an abstract musical aesthetic once worshipped as a God by the Aztec Maraca tribe.

Religious controversy aside, the Campus Police have engaged the wicker beasts in several skirmishes

Maud Montgomery, now, according to Bess Epperson, chairperson of the Maud About You devotional society, they can. The society is making portions of the beloved author and her personal effects available to qualified buyers.

The society (whose government grants are rapidly dwindling), is attempting to raise funds and awareness by liquidating "Montgomerian remnants".

Epperson is quick to dismiss any portrayal of herself and her associates as grave robbers, though an unnamed society member was quoted as saying the Road to Avonlea is paved with good intentions.

In the group's defence, Epperson represents their inventory as being primarily Montgomerian accessories, rather than remains. Items cited include an unopened pail of ice cream; a mouse, drowned (albeit remarkably well-preserved) in a Montgomerian pudding container; a dress with puffed sleeves; a broken chalk-slate; and brown sugar sculptures of Marilla and Matthew (when questioned as to the veracity of those particular items, Epperson would only reply that Lucy Maud works in mysterious ways).

In addition to these items, the society also admits to the possession of locks of hair and fingernail clippings, both apparently obtained through the descendants of Lucy Maud's beautician. These big-ticket items have attracted the attention of Japanese collectors, one of whom offered "two of those old Botticelli paintings" for a strand of Lucy Maud's silken tresses.

What troubles Epperson are the horror stories perpetuated by often unscrupulous copycat entrepreneurs who peddle false Montgomery remains-- including alleged bone fragments and other such objects-- to
