Bevan-Roper Wedding Is Held At Zion Presbyterian

The marriage took place on October 1st, 1966 at Zion Presbyterian Church, Charlottetown. Dianne Moore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold F. Roper of Sherwood and Harold Roy Bevan, eldest son of Mrs. H. Roy Bevan and the late Mr. Bevan of Parkdale. The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Donald A. Campbell, BA, DD.

Baskets of white, yellow and bronze chrysanthemums decorated the church for the occasion.

Organist, Florence Simmons accompanied Arlene MacDonald as she sang "The Wedding Prayer" during the service and "O Perfect Love" during the signing of the register.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor length gown of white tulle, a sequined scalloped hand clipped chertilly lace. It was fashioned with empire waistline, long lily point sleeves, and a sheath skirt. The detachable lace mantle train was delicately outlined in scallops. A head piece of lace appliques with seed pearls held her four tiered scalloped veil of silk illusion. She carried a cascade bouquet of talisman roses with streamers of rosebuds and tulle.

The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Hugh Harris, as matron-of-honor. Mrs. William MacPhee was bridesmaid and Karen Roper, sister of the bride, was junior bridesmaid. They chose floor length sheaths of pale green peau de sole with empire waistlines. Their head-dresses were rosettes of the same material trimmed with matching net, and they carried nosegays of green sprayed carnations.

Ken Rice was best man. Roger Bevan, brother of the groom and Ken Roper, brother of the bride ushered the guests to their seats.

The groom mother chose a two piece brown wool metallic suit and hat of beige velvet with matching accessories and a corsage of yellow carnations.

During the reception the guests were entertained by music played by Arthur Large. Dianne Moore, cousin of the bride, circulated the guest book. A. Walther Gaudet was master of ceremonies for the occasion, and Rae Roper, uncle of the bride, proposed the toast to the bride. Tots' Bedtime To Be Happier

Bedtime is about to become a happier time for thousands of youngsters.

Pert young designer Jane Wagner, who says she feels greater kinship with children than with adults, is seeing to that. She has dreamed up a line of both educational and entertaining linens for a manufacturer which makes going to bed a real adventure.

The problem may well become how to get children out of bed, instead of into it, as they get attached to their Teach Me, Read Me sheets and pillowcases with the fanciful parade of clocks, numerals, and zoo animals.

Miss Wagner has just returned to New York from an "autographing" trip around the country to launch the novel sheets, pillowcases, blankets, spreads, towels, and zoo bath rugs.

"So far, she says, store buyers and parents register one word: delighted!" "You see, when I was small," Jane Wagner muses, "I was always afraid of the dark. That's why I think of my characters and motifs as 'company' for children before and while they sleep. . . you know, sort of a built-in Teddy Bear. Only I want to people their darkness with a whole zoo of lovable animals which they can pull close about them."

Kerr-McCarthy Nuptials Held In Montague

The marriage took place in September, at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Montague of Edith Marilynn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene McCarthy of Murray Harbour North, and Kenneth Garth, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Garth W. Kerr, Montague. Rev. Father Ham-mill was the officiating clergyman.

Attending the bride were Sylvia Creed as maid of honor, Vas-hety Kerr, the groom's sister as bridesmaid, and Karen McCarthy, sister of the bride as flower girl. The ring bearer was Cameron McCarthy, the bride's brother.

Ralph Kerr was his brother's best man, and Ray Garnham and Arthur Hewitt were the ushers. A reception was held for 65 guests at the Lower Montague Hall, following the ceremony.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Some Robins Yet Delay Their Southward Trek

"There's no danger, Ellen, that you will lose yourself in our own back fields?" James inquired with a twinkle when the charm of this afternoon, begged us to come follow autumnal paths we knew.

"No, nor in the woodlands or groves "we chuckled. Particularly those on this farm!"

Prettily the farmlands lay bathed in the sunshine, the far heights banded by a lightly veiling blue haze.

James, the sun at a shoulder, looked back along the valley to the fields, with the autumn's gentle touch over all.

"We have a notion, Ellen - we got along so well with last Fall's piece of clearing - to get that stumpled next it, 'dosed,' one of these times. It would make a nice clearance back there. Not that there is not a nice lot of feed on it as it is for the cattle. But now we seem to be more and more accenting permanent pastures. And if that piece was in grain, well, it would come in handy. We are planning to burn those heaps of stumps this evening. If we get around to it. That would be a start toward clearing it."

Like James, we have been pleased up the years of our farming to see pieces of new land added to the rather smallish acreage of cropping land, this farm once knew. With him too, we own much regret to see once cultivated land being reclaimed by nature, the toll of years lost to young plantations, of impish, and fast-growing bushes.

And we wandered away along the pretty autumnal paths that we knew.

"You should wear a red jacket, Ellen," James called after us, "there may be hunters a-broad this lovely afternoon."

Neither hunters nor hunted we saw. Only the sun on the bleached stubbles, flocks and herds on pastures, folks at the digging, or harvesting roots. And in the distance, Mack at his plowing, Bright spots of color marked the wild cherry or low growing shrub, still holding their leaves. But to look away from an eminence of hill was to note that the golds of poplar and birch are now the predominant autumnal colors all about.

In the pastures where inviting trails wind away, how rare now are the flowerings. A lone daisy a single fall dandelion, stocks of the small blossomed sea-bane and the fluff of the tufted seeds winging off in the wind. Yet how pleasant was the October day; sunny, and sweet with the aroma of the year's ripening. And as always, remote fields, where echoes of the world without fall only vaguely, were peaceful. . . A company of robins held a conference in a rowaned hedgerow, setting the approximate time, we suspected, for the forthcoming trek to more summery climes. So pleasant it was. An afternoon to remember.

"I should go back, by rights, and re-pile those burning heaps," James says glancing at the clock. "But it's late. And we already tidied them once to make a good burn. They should be pretty well gone by the morning. How about some toast and tea?" he suggests with a smile. Until tomorrow . . . Diary . . . Good-night.

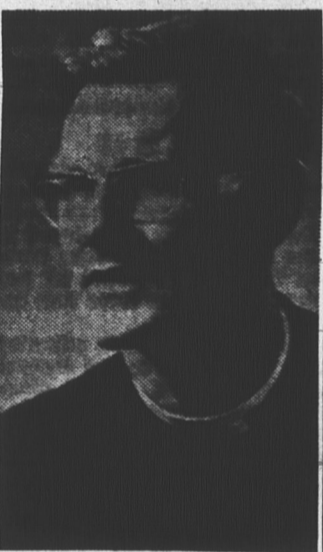

Vacant Houses Have Become No 1 Fire Risk

REGINA (CP) — Children playing with matches are one of Fire Chief Ernie Wilson's greatest problems.

"One of these days there's going to be a real catastrophe," he says. Chief Wilson, who heads the fire department in this city of 135,000 persons, says matches "are simply too accessible to kids."

He said about seven blazes a month are started by children playing with matches. So far in 1966 there have been 60 such fires. The greatest danger lies in vacant houses—great havens of make-believe for youngsters.

A recent fire here started by children destroyed a two-storey, vacant wooden house. "We just didn't know if there was still a kid in there or not. There's always the question: Should we send someone in?" The children responsible
