ELLEN'S DIARY

Peaceful Evening Spent Seated by Heartfire

We spend a quiet evening in here by the heartfire. Alex, the six-year-old of the house across the lane, is our only visitor. He came by straight, along the path which leads by the old birch tree. Scamper for company, if you can reach out to a hand and touch a friend in the dimness, no night-pitch is either strange or fearful. Seated on the couch, he is interested in an adult TV program.

"And where are the others?" James says. "Where are the others?" "Gone to the LH meeting in the rec. hall, some have as they go."

"How long can you stay?" my question, our thoughts on the time the stable is over, the need for youngsters to have a long refreshing sleep to meet its demands.

"Until I yawn" he grins. James comes to the armchair. Puts on his glasses, picks up the newspaper.

"The little heater that had the stillborn call is doing a good job. Yes, I have, in the afternoon when I came to the poleborn didn't I find a new coat? Yes, I have, in the afternoon. And that's something else, Ellen" he remembers.

"Curiosity climbs to the eucalyptus and rubs in a friendly gesture against Alex, who puts an arm about him, as he continues to read the newspaper."

"The world's in an unsettled state" James says above his paper. "Unsettled? Surely, but here on the farm in peace and quiet. Cases? Yes, I have, in the afternoon. And that's something else, Ellen" he remembers.

MARY HAWORTH

Positive Peace of Heart Insulates Against Hate

MARY HAWORTH has one program as much as many that truly beats me down. A very effective woman in an office, who uses every tactic to upset people, really drives me to half of my best.

Though I am by nature a passive person, I find myself in a position to have my own say. Yesterday, for example, after I told her not to try pushing me around, she asked "Why do you want to drop dead?" I retorted "Why don't you?"

But later I hate myself for falling prey to this very ignorant woman's meanness. Why do I take it upon myself to be so nice and intelligent, so why do I permit her ugliness to enter into my mind?

Dear Mrs. G. Very likely it is the call of kind to kind on the unconscious level, that causes you to respond with hatred.
