Uranium Ore Deposit Discovered In Australia

ADELAIDE, Australia. — (CP) Mining experts claim that pitchblende found at Wild Dog valley, only 40 miles from this South Australian state capital, represents the first discovery in Australia of the richest form of uranium ore. Geologists define the deposits as massive resinous-looking pitchblende. According to Mines Director S. B. Dickenson of South Australia, lumps of the ore contain 70 per cent or more of uranium oxide. The pitchblende at Rum Jungle, Australia's major uranium field in the Northern Territory, is not in the massive form, but is finely disseminated through black slate. But atomic experts say that Australia, although she has achieved world status as a uranium source, cannot hope for her own power supply from atomic energy for at least 10 years. Meanwhle the South Australian government has awarded $5,000 to the two brothers, W. F. and J. J. Wenham, who found the deposit, and has reserved mineral rights over a large part of the area.
