ELLEN'S DIARY

Gathering Strawberries Passes Quiet Afternoon

And at length a pleasant July day was here, warm and blue skied and fair. And the roses, drooping late, lifted heads and smiles, as the callers one by one came bringing at their doors for sweets. And garden-spots were colorful and happy again for a few days.

"Give me a lovely garden, And the rest of the world you may take, Give me the songs of the earth Each morning when I awake, Give me the petals of each rose, Give me the earth's bright rainbow, Give me a slight at my feet, Give me a lovely garden, In exchange for a busy street."

Give me the laughter of Nature, Which breaks into colored smiles, Give me one foot of flower-filled earth, In exchange for shop-lit miles, Give me the gold-splashed sunbines, And shady nooks, green-dim, And give me the soft rain falling, Like cool notes of a peace-filled hymn.

There is also, we find, an inspiration in being one as a busy street, so interesting and diverse it is to our farm - ways. And at times, shop-lit miles too have their charms.

Against a slope in a sunny glade this afternoon, the children, clustered with the luscious fruit, we could appreciate, merrily, their noble, earnest, to carry with them forever...

One day will Granddaughter perhaps, some far off, note the summery sky and the high road, of white clouds and find a bouquet, which will draw me back to her childhood home.

As so many Island-borne these days are being drawn to the scenes of their youth - to see the fields and woodlands, its red roses winding, and walk the old paths, more, more, and more, for yours and granddaddy's supper? Also granted, bringing in share of the treasure. "We had your names in the jug! Surprise indeed!" we said. "They will 'tempt' your appetites!" he commented. "They surely will!" we chuckled.

And James came to the wedding which had made fine progress today, as also did the shining on the roof of the far barn.

Now the late sands of the day close, ending another summer week. It was a week which saw some showery days and cool. But granted, bringing in share of the treasure. "We had your names in the jug! Surprise indeed!" we said. "They will 'tempt' your appetites!" he commented. "They surely will!" we chuckled.
