Session Of Church Council Concluded
TORONTO, July 16 (CP) - The central committee of the World Council of Churches ended its week-long annual session Saturday.

The policy-making body of the largest international group of Protestant and Orthodox churches reiterated traditional Christian viewpoints during the meetings. But, more significantly, they were placed in relation to actual world problems.

The committee condemned the use of atomic or bacteriological weapons in Korea or anywhere else. There, with only two members of pacifist conviction dissenting, it approved United Nations intervention in Korea as a police action.

Although not all of the 90 committee members were present, the group nevertheless was empowered to speak for more than 160,000,000 Christians—some in iron curtain countries.

Some of the men who approved the statement on Korea live at the edge of the iron curtain. Courage was needed for them to condemn Communist expansion.

Once again the committee reiterated its opposition to discrimination or segregation on ground of race or color.

Then it put teeth in its belief. It took South Africa as a prime example of an area where race relations have deteriorated.

The committee voted to send a delegation of both whites and negroes there to help seek a solution to the problem—provided the Dutch reformed churches would receive the group.

This action was pressed largely by the American delegation—including Negroes—over the objections of South African delegates and some Europeans.

In another action, the committee condemned curbing of religious freedom by governments, churches or other agencies. It made it clear that it opposed discrimination by faith and specifically named Protestant, Roman Catholic, Moslem and Orthodox.

Then the group told member churches in effect, to set their own houses in order and to work with World Council support for the cause of religious freedom through their own governments and the United Nations.

Teachers From 26 Countries To Meet

OTTAWA, July 16 (CP) - The world organization of the teaching profession, already 2,000,000 strong, is considering possible coalition with the 500,000-member International Federation of Elementary Teachers Associations and the 138,000-member International Federation of Secondary Teachers Organizations.

W. O. T. P. president W. F. Russell of Columbia University, New York, said in an interview today that pros and cons of union into one closely-knit confederation will be studied at the W. O. T. P. week-long assembly to get under way tomorrow.

Dr. Russell estimated that approximately 150 delegates from 26 countries will attend the meetings. In addition, Denmark, Uruguay, Ecuador, Japan and Western Germany are sending observers.

Education for peace will be another important topic of the conference. Delegates also will compare notes on teachers salaries in the various countries.

Northern Ireland's representative J. K. Carson of Belfast, said earlier that the study of teachers' salaries would be one of the important items on the agenda.

"No matter what country, teachers are up against it in regard to salaries," he said.

Bolivia, Brazil, Philippines, India, Haiti, Iceland, Finland and New Zealand are sending representatives to this session of the four-year-old W. O. T. P., which is composed of more than 20 national teachers associations with a combined membership of more than 2,000,000.

There also will be delegates from Malta, France and Italy. Biggest delegation will come from the United States which is sending 50 representatives. Next in size is the 28-member Canadian delegation from the Canadian Teachers Federation and headed by the president, Dr. L. Bernice McNaughton of Moncton, N. B.

LONDON, July 16 (CP) - The King and Queen are joining Princess Margaret in a round of late night parties.

For the first time since the King's illness last year, the royal couple is filling a heavy round of social engagements.

One of the most glittering assemblies took place recently at Herford House, London, when the King, the Queen and Princess Margaret were guests of honor at the 50th anniversary of the opening of the Wallace collection.

London newspapers generally hailed the event as one of the most brilliant held in London since King Edward VII, as Prince of Wales, opened the collection to the public. The collection of art treasures was described as the most fabulous ever presented to the British public.

At the foot of a grand staircase, under Lawrence's famous portrait of George IV, the Queen made a lovely picture in a lemon crinoline decorated with hundreds of brilliant that sparkled in the lights and vied with the fire reflected from her diamond tiara and necklace.

The King and Queen made a round of the collection and left shortly after midnight. Princess Margaret stayed to finish the evening.

ROUGH SURFACE GOOD FOR TODDLER'S FEET
LONDON, July 16 (CP) - Pebbles, shingle, gravel, pine needles—any rough surface—are good for babies' feet.

Dr. Margaret Elmslie, speaking at the opening of the national foot health week exhibition here, said uneven surfaces that are not smooth, stimulate the toddler's foot muscles.

The doctor experimented in nurseries with mattresses of pebbles and broken cork and found that children don't notice the difference. It improves their sense of balance.

"The more babies run about on rough surfaces without shoes from the time they begin to stand, the better for their feet afterwards," she said.

Summer Accessories Lend Color Interest

NEW YORK, July 16 (CP) - For the little accessory touches to add interest and variety to the summer wardrobe, here are some suggestions from the New York shops:

With the season's popular sheath dress, wear a circle of flowers high on the arm.

Real butterflies, plastic-treated for durability, are being featured by one designer. They come clustered on velvet-covered clips to wear about the head, or mounted on combs, pins or nose-gays.

A rope of pearls, finished at either end with a kerchief-square of chiffon may be wound about the neck and fastened according to the wearer's whim, or worn as a belt. Other necklet ideas include multiple strands of pearls twined together with pearls or crystal.
