MY DOG.

[CONTRIBUTED BY WM. A. MCD.]

I have a friend, a trusty friend, Who courts my "companion," Who loves, through life, his days to spend In serving none but me.

I have a friend whose noble heart To me is ever true; Whose love for me can never depart While life is in us two.

When time's strange course had strangely chanced For him and me to meet, Knew, when on him first I glanced, He'd be my playmate sweet.

I called him by his name—"tis Prince"— He willingly came near, And with me in my cot has since Proved true for many a year.

When joy is mine, it too, is his, When sickness lowly lays me, Or when ill-temper clouds my bliss, He still does not forsake me.

When man, the bitterest foe of man, Or any other "beastie," Attempts on me abuse to palm, 'Tis then my dog gets "hastie."

In danger's hour he's first to flight, When only fight is wanted, In danger's hour the last for flight, The last that can be daunted.

When filthy, stealthsome rats and mice Keep not beyond his smelling; It then becomes his decent choice To beard them in their dwelling.

By night, upon the chill, cold grass, And on the frozen snow, too, He lays, content that none shall pass But those he keeps right to.

When I to court my lass am "game," And him forbid to follow; 'Tis on the threshold he'll remain With face portrayed with sorrow.

And when that morn her mantle gray Throws o'er my path and me O! I smile and think upon the day When I will marry—O!

But e'er I push aside the bar That fasts the time-worn door; My Prince, like to the morning star, Is up, and shines e'en more.

Yet, oft I cruelly raise my hand, Through mortal's selfish nature, And impart a pain, but not a brand, Upon my friendly creature.

How strange it seems, deceitful man, To whom a soul is given; Should ever have a hope to scan The crystal walls of heaven, Lot 14, January, 1867.

CHAPTER XXIII.—Continued.

THE QUADROON.

'What motive have you in seeking her further acquaintance?' asked Clow, bluntly.

'Well, that would be difficult to tell. She is very lovely, and loveliness is captivating! She is witty, and wit charms! She has a delightful voice, and this is pleasing to the ear! In a word, it is very agreeable to know such a person.'

'But her fair name must not be sacrificed for your pleasure! You had best see her no more.'

'I must see her again! This acquaintance shall not terminate so.'

'I am in some sort responsible, Mr. Ellery, having introduced you. I know your character for levity with the sex, and I should condemn myself for permitting your further visits. I can prevent them. A word from me, and you will never behold her again!'

'Clow, do you love the Signora yourself?' 'No, I love but one, whose name you know. I do not fear in you a rival. I have, moreover, the utmost confidence in her purity of character and principles. I have fulfilled my promise to you, in introducing you. I shall perform my duty to her, by refusing permission for you to see her again.'

'You seem to hold great power over her, said the young man, with surprise.'

'Only that of a friend. I am responsible for your honorable conduct in reference to her.'

'Both were silent for a few moments, when Ellery said,

'Clow, I am infatuated with this lovely girl. I am in love with her. My senses are intoxicated with her glorious beauty. It is impossible for me to consent never to see her again in her home! Will you be an inducement?'

'No, Mr. Ellery,' answered the mulatto, firmly. 'There is but one condition on which you will be permitted to see her.'

'Name it, and if it is half my uncle's wealth, you shall have it signed over to you!'

'It is not a condition of money. It is, that you confess to me that your intentions are honorable.'

'Honorable?'

'You understand me.'

'Do you seriously mean to ask if I am willing to address her?'

'Yes.'

'A Jewess?'

'Yes.'

'An opera-singer?'

'Yes.'

'You jest, Philip!'

'More than one English nobleman has been married to opera-singers and actresses.'

'That is true—that is very true,' responded Ellery, musingly. 'But that is a different thing.'

'They would envy you the possession of such a treasure. Besides, you pride yourself on your independence. You have no one to consult but your own wishes and humors. You are sure of your wife's talents, wit, and beauty, will place her and yourself both in an enviable position in society. If you are not received here as you desire, there is London and Paris. There you will be distinguished. Carlton Ellery, Esq., and his beautiful Jewish bride will be on every lip. You say you are in love! You say you are infatuated! If this is true, it will require no sacrifice on your part to take the honorable step I point out, and which is the only condition on which you can again see her. I leave the subject to your consideration. Whenever you say you are willing to marry her, if she will accept you, I promise you to favor your suit so far as I have any influence with her father. On no other condition will you be able to see her again.'

'But she may decline a proposal of marriage.'

'You have only to see her, and propose it to her. Well, the conditions are not hard, Philip,' answered Ellery, laughing. 'I should be the gainer. If I thought she would marry me, I would not hesitate, I verily believe. I will tell you what I will do, Philip. Go with me once more there, as you say no one can be admitted unless you accompany them—go with me again to-morrow evening, and let me have one more interview with her. If I decide then not to propose to her, I will never ask to see her again. Give me one more interview before I decide.'

'I consent to it. To-morrow evening, at the same hour, call on me, and I will accompany you.'

'Thanks, good Philip, thanks! We are now at your door. I will take the cab to the opera, where I hope once more to see my fascinating. I fear she has me in a net, and that I will have to surrender myself her willing prisoner! But one more interview, and the chain will be either broken, or riveted for life.'

The mulatto now alighted at his own door, and the cab drove away with the young man. Clow entered the side door of his dingy-looking inn, and ascending the stairs, passed into his private room by means of a catch-key. He closed and fastened the door behind him, went through the opposite one into his sister's boudoir, and then opening a door on the opposite side, he passed out into the very hall, with the lighted chandelier, and gorgeous pictures, and showy furniture, which had attracted the eyes of Carlton Ellery. The fact was, Clow's dwelling had two fronts, one of them being upon a street several feet lower than the other front, which was upon a handsome court. A person acquainted with the passages could enter at the door on the court, and passing first up and then down flights of stairs, and then through passages, could descend and pass out on the lower street by the inn door. The 'Court' or 'Place' door could be reached only by driving or walking round the square, which was some distance, and so down the court to the house. In the evening, as it was when Carlton rode from his door with him to call on the opera-singer, the distance seemed great, and Carlton believed, when he landed at her door, that he was in quite a different part of the city from Clow's inn, when, in fact, he was not twenty rods, in a direct line through the house, from the place where he got into the cab. The secret of the connection between the two houses was only known to Clow, his sister, and the young fair-haired servant-girl, who was Isabel's attendant. This child was an orphan, whom Clow had got bound to him, because she was so very fair, and therefore represented the distinctive hue of the race which he hated with a passion that was a part of his nature. This child he treated as a slave; and if he had had it in his power, and she could have borne it, he would have heaped upon her head the weight of the ignominy, suffering, and infamy which the race from which he sprung endured in bondage from her own. This child was truly his slave. She feared his slightest look, and trembled whenever he spoke to her. With her the secret was safe; for her pale lips would never have dared reveal what she had witnessed within the walls of her master.

The mulatto entered the luxurious drawing-room, where he found Isabel alone.

'Well, Isabel,' he said gaily, as he approached her, 'you have acted your part to please me! What think you of my young heir? This prince of the white blood?'

'I despise him,' she answered, with a look of contempt. 'He is the worshipper of himself, and utterly destitute of principle!'

'You have done well to conceal your sentiments to him! He is deeply enamored. You have captivated his imagination so perfectly, that all I have to do is to suggest for him to acquiesce! In a word, he is infatuated, and will never rest till you consent to wed him!'

'Then he will long remain at unrest! I would rather give my hand to the basest slave of our accursed race, than to such a one as he!'

'Do not anger me,' said the mulatto. 'I must speak as I feel. Carlton Ellery shall never have this hand in wedlock, though he sue for it on his knees!'

'But you forget—it is revenge we both seek! Vengeance upon the haughty race that despises us! I do not expect you to love him! I expect you to wed him to be avenged on him for his scorn of our race, and to triumph when he shall find he has wedded the daughter of a generation of Ethiopian slaves! This is the great end you should keep in view. For this you should be willing to sacrifice yourself! Let no meaner considerations cross your path to vengeance. Will it not be worth a life's sacrifice to raise yourself to a level with him and his race; to hold the place in his heart and home the fair white daughters of this proud city would covet to take? Is it not enough reward to elevate, in your person, our degraded blood to a level with that of those who hold themselves our masters?'

'If I could love this man?' she said, hesitatingly. 'Hate him! I do not wish you to love him! Marry him for hatred, not for love! Show him after that it was for hatred and not for love that you did wed him! The more bitterly you hate him, the more reason you have to wed him!'

The young girl reflected a few moments.

'On one condition I will wed him for the hatred I bear him and his race.'

'Name it.'

'That you will suffer me, unrestrained, to carry out my own plans with reference to the young man I so madly love, and whom I expect here at eight o'clock.'

'So that it does not interfere with Ellery, I consent.'

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE RETROSPECTION.

We will now go back and make a brief recapitulation of the events narrated in the foregoing chapters, and refresh the reader's memory, as well as prepare his attention for the conclusion of this story, which will be extended but to one chapter further. It will have been observed that four here,

James Dally, was selected, as the victim of a conspiracy, of which Carlton Ellery was the prime mover; aided by the mulatto, Philip Clow, and others. The motives which led Ellery to attempt the ruin of James Dally, have been shown to have had their origin in rivalry, united with that instinctive dislike a man of evil character entertains towards another of pure morals and unblemished name. This two-fold motive sharpened his invention and enabled him to take measures so deeply laid, that the destruction of the object at which they were aimed, seemed sure.

ALL CURES MADE EASY!

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

Bad Legs, Ulcerous Sores, Bad Breasts, and Old Wounds.

No description of wound, sore or ulcer can resist the healing properties of this excellent Ointment. The worst cases readily assume a healthy appearance whenever this medical agent is applied; sound flesh springs up from the bottom of the wound, inflammation of the surrounding skin is arrested and a complete and permanent cure quickly follows the use of the ointment.

Piles, Fistulas, and Internal Inflammation

These distressing and weakening diseases may with certainty be cured by the sufferers themselves, if they will use Holloway's Ointment, and closely attend to the printed instructions. It should be well rubbed upon the neighboring parts, when all obnoxious matter will be removed. A poultice of bread and water may sometimes be applied at bed time with advantage; the most scrupulous cleanliness must be observed. If those who read this paragraph will bring it under the notice of such of their acquaintances whom it may concern, they will render a service that will never be forgotten, as a cure is certain.

Rheumatism, Gout and Neuralgia.

Nothing has the power of reducing inflammation and soothing pain in these complaints in the same degree as Holloway's cooling Ointment and purifying Pills. When used simultaneously they drive all inflammation and depravities from the system, subdue and remove all enlargement of the oints, and leave the sinews and muscles lax and uncontracted. A cure may always be effected, even under the worst circumstances, if the use of these medicines be persevered in.

Eruptions, Scald Head, Ringworm, and other Skin Diseases.

After fermentation with warm water, the utmost relief and speediest cure can be readily obtained in all complaints affecting the skin and joints, y the simultaneous use of the Ointment and Pills. But it must be remembered that nearly all skin diseases indicate the depravity of the blood and derangement of the liver and stomach, consequently, in many cases, time is required to purify the blood, which will be effected by a judicious use of the Pills. The general health will readily be improved, although the eruptions may be driven out more freely than before, and which should be promoted; perseverance is necessary.

Sore Throats, Diphtheria, Quinsey, Mumps, and all other Derangements of the Throat.

On the appearance of any of these maladies the Ointment should be well rubbed at least three times a day upon the neck and upper part of the chest, so as to penetrate to the glands, as salt is forced into meat; this course will at once remove inflammation and ulceration. The worst cases will yield to this treatment by following the printed directions.

Scrofula or King's Evil and Swelling of the Glands.

This class of cases may be cured by Holloway's purifying Pills and Ointment, as their double action of purifying the blood and strengthening the system renders them more efficacious than any other remedy for all complaints of a scrofulous nature. As the blood is impure, liver, stomach, and bowels being much deranged, require purifying medicine, to bring about a cure.

Both the Ointment and Pills should be used in the following cases:—

Bad Legs, Chilblains, Fistulas, Skin-diseases, Bad Breasts, Chieft-foot Gout, Sore-throats, Burns, Chapped Hands, Glandular Swellings, Scrofulous Blisters, Corns (Soft), Swellings, Scrofulous Blisters, Cancers, Lumbago, Sore-heads, chetoes and Contracted and Piles, Ulcers, Sand-flies, Stiff Joints, Rheumatism, Tumors, Coco-bay, Elephantiasis, Scalds, Yaws, Wounds.

Sold at the Establishment of Professor HOLLOWAY, 224 Strand, (near Temple Bar), London; and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the civilized world, at the following prices:—1s. 4d., 2s., 4s., 6s., 11s., 22s., and 53s. each Pot.

There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.
