THE BARCAIN CORNER

is no miser for our store, situated in the heart of the city, it also occupies a warm spot in the hearts of Charlottetown's thrifty buyers. The reason of this is self evident. We have always tried to make the interest of ourselves and of our patrons mutual. That has always been our aim and will continue to be.

OUR STORE JUST NOW

is pretty well loaded down with all kinds of dry goods. We have been opening our fall readymade clothing, and can truthfully say that there is not the like of the stock and the like of the values on P. E. Island—and no charge to see them. If you don't want to buy now all right. Then we have our dress goods department—rather a new department for us—but nevertheless it is worth your while to inspect our stock in this line. Flannelettes, Gingham, Fleeces and Prints, cheap as can be bought in Charlottetown.

McKAY WOOLEN COMPANY.

BURGLARS WANTED.

To the Burglar who entered our office and broke the Handle of Safe we extend an invitation to call again, promising him a free entry into the safe, and thereby saving him the use of the Stillson wrench. We will not insure his easy exit, but will be on hand with an ambulance and undertaker.

At the same time we give the Dairymen a guarantee for one year with our twelve gang Cheese Presses. Nearly all that were imported here in the past required to be repaired within a year.

Our improved Cheese Vat is the most popular in the market.

Our Babcock Testers never break the bottles.

The press hoops are right for eighty lbs of curd.

And best of all the "ALPHA de LAVAL SEPARATOR" is on the way ahead of all others.

OUR BIG EXHIBIT OF NEW CLOTHS

We are opening our different lines for the new season, with much the same feeling of confidence which a fellow experiences when he has a good thing. So many good cloths grouped together that it is impossible to tell you all about them. Come and see the

BEAUTIFUL LINES OF OVERCOATINGS

the finest ever brought to the city. And Trouserings, the finest you ever laid eyes on; and for Suits, they are beautiful in the extreme. Those goods will be shown with much pleasure, and will be on exhibit this afternoon and to-morrow

The Kitten's Last Visit to the Lion.

One night a little, purring kitten rubbed herself in friendly fashion against the great iron bars of the den of old Paul, the zoo's famed lion, of whom extreme age has made a pitiable show these many weeks. It was the kitten's way of coaxing Paul to come to say goodnight to her, for Paul and kittle were the best of friends. She was the only bit of outside life that Paul was ever friendly with. Every night for weeks kittle has crept shyly up in front of the bars of her old lion lover's home, and when she mewed to him he came forward and put his great, shaggy head as close to her as he could, and they caressed each other.

Last night when kittle came and, rubbing cooingly against the bars, mewed all softly to her jungle lover to come and say goodnight, Paul just lay still, his head between his paws, and didn't notice her at all. Tiring of coaxing him, the faithful kittle stopped and just looked and looked at the noble, great fellow. Finally a keeper saw her do something that instinct never let her do before. She shyly crept through the big, black iron bars and, going in, caressed the great, bowed head in her most loving way. But there was no response. Then kittle slowly went away and Paul slept on—the sleep that knows no waking.

Scores of people who had known the old lion for nearly 20 years had just been visiting him, and hosts of tiny children had tossed him kisses just as death was coming on. He died exactly as Superintendent Stephan a month ago said he would, "as if asleep, with his head between his paws."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Tracing the Microbe.

A gentleman who will henceforth be known to fame as Professor Hankin has proved himself to be the Sherlock Holmes of the microbe. It is told that 13 persons sat down to dinner at Sangor, in India, and that one of the dishes of which they ate was a chocolate pudding. Nine of them were afterward taken sick, and three of them had cholera, which caused the death of one. It is generally conceded that chocolate pudding is not necessarily fatal and that it is not an established home of the cholera microbe. Professor Hankin therefore set out to trace the microbe to its lair. He found the deadly thing in a water pot in the kitchen, but he ascertained that this pot had been filled at a pure spring. The dishcloth used in carrying the pot, however, had been dried on an infected sand bank. Professor Hankin then proceeded to demonstrate by a beautiful experiment the deadly nature of this particular pudding. He took three of the ingredients—milk, eggs and gelatin—under absolutely sterilizing conditions, made a "culture," inoculated it, cooked it and produced 9,000,000 cholera microbes to the cubic centimeter. Indian cooks who prepare chocolate pudding for government sabhis in the present state of affairs in India are in danger of sudden trouble.—New York Times.

Animals and music.

The London Spectator gives an account of experiments made to determine the sensibility of animals to music. In each experiment the violin would first be played, at first low and soft, then gradually louder and louder. The sharp, high toned piccolo would then follow and then the flute. The effect was often startling. The tiger, for example, listened intently and with evident pleasure to the violin, but when the piccolo began was filled with the wildest rage, rushed up and down the cage, reared on its hind legs, shook its head and ears, and lashed its tail from side to side. The flute, however, calmed it at once, and coming to the bars of the cage it listened intently. The monkeys were affected in the same way, but were not so violent in expressing their emotions. Violin music was often so agreeable to them that they would drop their food and listen very attentively, while the piccolo almost invariably aroused their anger. The elephant preferred the flute and was enraged at the piccolo, as was also the ostrich. The wild asses and zebras left their food when the violin began to play and ran over to hear it. The piccolo, however, soon sent them back again.

High Power Telescopes.

The cost of high class telescopes is such as to effectually bar them from all but extremely wealthy individuals and corporations. The 42 inch objective for the new Yerkes telescope cost $18,000 for the rough cast alone. Doubts that amount was expended for the grinding and polishing. An ingenious inventor has been studying the principle of objectives, and, it is said, has invented a lens made in sections. One scientist says that if this experiment proves successful, and of this there is but little doubt, telescopes that now cost hundreds of thousands of dollars can be made so cheaply that their purchase will only involve a sum obtainable by almost any high school in the land. This statement seems almost too wonderful to be true, but it is given on excellent authority. The new idea is briefly the assembling of a large number of small lenses in exactly the form of the large one, following in every detail the same lines and curves.—New York Ledger.

The Troubles of a Town.

The virtue of consistency is giving the citizens of Somersworth, N. H., a lot of trouble. First, Mayor Hanson caused the arrest of those who sold candy and soda water on Sunday, in order that the Sunday law might be consistently enforced. Then one of the men arrested thought that consistency required the arrest of the mayor, who runs a livery stable, which hires horses on Sunday. The mayor was fined $5. Lastly, a citizen threatens to have the authorities of the Methodist church arrested for the unnecessary ringing of the church bell on Sunday. The result of all this is that nearly everybody in the town is angry with somebody else.—New York Tribune.
