Individualist Clemente

AS FAR AS Pittsburgh Pirates fans are concerned the greatest pleasure is to perform with the Black and the hometown Forbes Field was Paul Waner.

A Waner Fan Club has appeared on the scene however, in the person of Roberto Clemente.

Clemente is the Pirates' outfielder who is rated not quite as good a hitter, or thrower as Willie Mays. And that is the same way a lot of Pirates fans rate him with the smooth playing Waner, who played 215 games with the Pirates and wound up with a batting average of .300.

The outspoken Roberto doesn't like being compared to anyone. He insists he's a player with a style all his own.

"I am tired of playing in a shadow," the Pirate rightfielder says. "Everything I do they compare to Paul Waner. I ain't no Paul Waner's shadow."

"I try not to let it bother me but I get tired of the things some people say."

In Houston last night, right before the end of the season, I was still in the race for the batting title and Murrough (Pirate manager) told me to do everything possible to win it. One time I was being intentionally walked and I swung at one of the pitches. Then wasn't a team player anymore.

"People said I was for myself."

Clemente's criticism of being compared to Waner and his bias at persons who said he wasn't a team man rate him in our books as a guy who doesn't care two shakes about falling in with the "nice-boy, team-man image" ball owners have attempted to paste on all the players in the majors.

We say hurrah for Clemente the Individualist. He's the talkative kind of guy who can sell his own brand of professional ball because he wouldn't give up his off-season writings, has the guts to say:

"Baseball is being ruined by the unimaginative, narrow-minded organization men who now run the professional ball game. These men want to see the ball game played the way it was played when I was a kid. They want to see a player who shows signs of individuality suppressed, traded, or sent to the minors or kicked out of baseball."

Maybe it isn't quite as good as Brogan's, but it ain't good.

Off The Cuff

A $150.00 CHECK received by poster ALVIE THOMPSON for winning the Mantholone Bow was stolen from the golfer here in the Toronto area.

Thompson's check and $150 in cash disappeared while he was in a cab en route to the Toronto area.

Double Returns $529.60 At Ch town Driving Park

Shown above is part of the exciting harness racing action which was witnessed at the Charlotte town Driving Park last night. Will Mahlon owned by Mrs. Irene Craig, Victoria and teamed by Harold Sully.

Germany was the lone patron of the local track to hold a ticket on the winning combination.

The excorciator which was featured on the sixth dash was the second largest pay of the evening.

A winning ticket was worth $103.40. Will Mahlon with Harold Sully on the horse came home on time in 2:14.3 and Land Kai steered by Lorne Hennessy captured the place position in a down to the wire finish.

Will Mahlon lowered her time in the field in the first dash. Mr. MacFadyen took her to the top on the second turn and she never looked back in setting a new record for herself of 2:16.1.

Her stiffest competition came from a good looking two year old in Yankee Timber with Joe Hennessy riding. He finished in a respectable fourth place in 2:16.3.

Don MacNeil added to his already surprising string of wins by taking the eighth dash in 2:16.3.

George Egan leading Senior Golf Championship

By W. R. WHATELY

MASTERS OF THE CHAMPIONSHIP George Egan of Toronto came down with the putting finish Thursday.

The Canadian Golf Association's senior golf championship. The 59-year-old player from Toronto's Summit Club wanted out a five-over-par 77 over the Summer course and his 36-hole score of 151 left him with a three-stroke margin over Robert MacDonell of Montreal.

Tied at 158 were C. Ross (Sandy) Somerville of London, Ont. and Herb Thorp of Montreal. The veteran Somerville scored second round 78 and Thorp came through with a 76, clipping six strokes off his first round.

Robert George McLean of Toronto, who had a first-round 78 and was Egan's closest pursuer starting out Thursday, scored second round 78 and Thorp came through with a 76, clipping six strokes off his first round.
