ADVERTISING RATES

For small advertisements which are ordered for only one or two weeks the charge is 50 cents per inch for the first insertion, and 20 cents for each continuation. Rate cards are furnished on application at the office. Special contract prices at a reduced rate are quoted for advertisements four inches in size or larger, which are to run for three months or longer.

No special notices inserted unless paid for at the rate of 10 cents per line, and under no circumstances will such paid notices appear in the local column.

Special discounts made on all advertisements connected with Church Fairs, Bazaars, cales, etc. No notices will be inserted with the same unless the regular rate of 10 cents per line is paid.

That THE EXAMINER is considered by our Merchants and Manufacturers to be the leading newspaper in P. E. Island, and consequently the most valuable advertising medium through which to make their announcements public, is abundantly proved by the fact that in order to accommodate our advertisers we have been compelled to enlarge the paper to its present size.

HAVE A GUESS.

Oh, wheelmen, all take my advice,
And don't forget, be sure
To take a look at the famous "Bike"
In PROWSE'S well-known Store.

The handsome Brantford Bicycle
That in their window's shown
Is as good as any in Charlottetown,
And it may be your own.

A jar in which are cents galore
Is placed where all can see;
Guess how many cents the jar contains
And the "Bike" your own will be.

Be wise, make all your purchases
At PROWSE'S Clothing Store;
Each purchase, on that Bicycle,
Will give you one chance more.

Their Carpets, Hats and Furnishings,
And all, in fact, they keep,
Compared with others in the town
Are more than quite as cheap.

Cottolene

A SHORTENING.

Down the street through the busy way
A lady passed on marketing day.
Who, pausing at a grocery store,
Stepped quickly in at the open door.
With bated breath and anxious mien
She queried: "have you COTTOLENE?"

The grocer, leaving off his work,
Interrogated every clerk;
But none up to that time had seen
An article called "COTTOLENE."

"What is it?" said he to the dame,
"That answers to this curious name.
What is it made of? What's its use?
My ignorance you'll please excuse."

"You're not the merchant for my dimes,
I see you're quite behind the times.
For COTTOLENE, I'd have you know,
Is now the thing that's all the go,
An article of high regard;
A healthful substitute for lard.
Its composition pure and clean;
For cooking give me COTTOLENE."

As from his store the lady fled,
The grocer gently scratched his head—
On his next order, first was seen,
"One dozen cases COTTOLENE."

A DUMB PRINCESS.

Once upon a time there lived a king who had an immense garden. Its paths were strewn with gayly colored sand, in the niches of its yew tree hedge stood white marble statues, and strange flowers of burning colors surrounded the grass plats. But in the middle of the garden was a pond, in the center of which was a group of fish tailed sea gods, who, sitting upon spouting dolphins, were blowing their shell trumpets.

All the world admired this garden. There was only one person whom it did not please—this was the king's young and most beautiful daughter. Those shameless heathen gods frightened her, and she always avoided the garden.

Therefore the king, who loved his daughter above all the world, sent for a young gardener, who had traveled through many lands and had seen many splendid things, and commanded him to make a new garden in place of the old one. He wished to make a present of it to the princess on her birthday.

The gardener did his best. He dug and chopped and he planted. Sunshine and rain did their part also, and when the birthday came the gardener stood at the entrance gate and held a salver on which he offered to the princess the golden keys to the garden. Followed by courtiers and ladies in waiting, the princess then made the tour of the garden.

The heart of the king's daughter leaped within her for joy. She forsook the gravel walk and sprang lightly over the lawn, so that her court ladies had difficulty in keeping up with her. But with measured tread and a frequent shake of the head the court duenna followed the frolicsome young people. A nodding rose twig had stuck in her powdered hair as she passed. She thought the new garden hideous.

Now, the princess was nearing the spot where the marble basin had formerly had a place. To-day there lay a tiny, smiling green lake.

"Oh, how charming!" exclaimed the princess, and the ladies repeated the word after her.

Then a dreadful thing happened. A fat, green frog which was sitting in the reeds looking out for water ladies, being disturbed by the rustle of silken garments, made a great jump and plunged into the water so violently that the drops spurted up.

Every one screamed, and the princess sank down, all pale, upon the ground. Now the court duenna hastened her steps and was shocked to see what had happened. Luckily musk and smelling salts were easily found. The fainting girl soon came to herself, but fright had taken away her speech. With disturbed faces and shaking with anxiety, the ladies in waiting carried her back to the palace.

In honor of the princess the townspeople had decked their houses with greens and gay flags, but when the midday hour chimed they removed all signs of decoration, for Dame Rumor announced that the king's daughter had suddenly become dumb.

And unhappily this was no empty hearsay.

The princess had long recovered from her fright. She could eat and drink, but no word passed her lips. She had lost the power of speech.

Physicians came to her side. They caused all the circumstances to be told them, put their heads together and wrote long prescriptions. The patient swallowed obediently drops, pills and powders, but the power of speech did not return.

The whole court was draped in mourning. But the old king, who was usually so mild and kind, foamed with rage. He ordered all the frogs in his kingdom to be killed and set a price of a farthing on the head of every frog. But he threw the gardener into prison. Of what use was it all? The princes remained dumb.

Days, weeks and months passed by. Physicians collected there from all corners of the globe. When one ordered the other always condemned, but not one of them could give back to the king's daughter her power of speech. Wise women and clever shepherds were also sent for. Even Master Hammerlein, the executioner, was commanded to come. They plied their strange and sacret remedies, but none of them could help her.

In the meantime the poor gardener was in a sorry plight. He had hoped for a rich reward, and now he was lying in chains and could behold neither sun nor moon. But his old mother was still living in the homestead, and she was a clever woman of much experience. When she heard what had happened to her son, she tied up her bundle and wandered off to the king's town. When she arrived there, she betook herself to the prison and implored the turnkey with such moving words that he at last led her into the prison.

The mother and son remained alone together for half an hour. Then the old woman hobbled off. But when the warder brought his jug of water to the young man he was walking about his cell, with his head high, whistling a tune.

Next day he demanded to be taken before the king. He claimed that he possessed the remedy which would restore the power of speech to the princess.

The princess had been obliged that same day to undergo a great deal. First she had been pricked with redhot needles by a foreign doctor. At this she had groaned and sobbed, but not a word had she spoken. After that she had been given, at the advice of an old herb doctor, the heart, brain and tongue of a magpie, and this was also quite useless. Now the princess was lying, pale and languid, on a couch, so exhausted that she had closed her eyes.

They brought the gardener to her side. His chains were clanking, but he walked erect and seemed in good spirits.

"Try your arts," said the king, "and if you can cure her you shall receive the order of the Green Crocodile and as much gold as you can carry."

The gardener went to the invalid's couch, made her sit up, which she did willingly, took her little white hand in his and gazed into her tired eyes.

"Poor little princess," he then said. "So unhappy and only one and twenty years old."

Then a slight blush covered the princess' countenance, her bosom rose and fell painfully, and from her lips burst the words "Not yet!"

The power of speech had returned to her. But the king wept tears of joy, in which the whole court joined him.—From the German of Rudolf Baumbach.

DRINKERS NOT WANTED.

It is practical temperance work that the railroads are doing, and tremendously effective. Most of the great railway lines of the eastern half of the United States enforce a practical expulsion of drinking men from their employ. Their officers take the common sense view that where the safety of life and property depends upon employes, it is necessary that the latter shall, at all times, be in full possession of all their faculties. They need the clear brain, the sure eye, the certain hand. He whose brain is befogged by liquor has none of these.

It is not alone the railroads which are thus discriminating against drinking men. In our cities, the rule of employing only men of sobriety is increasingly followed. No wise business man will employ a drinking man in any position of trust, particularly any one which involves the handling of money. Note the records of thefts, embezzlements and defalcations by trusted employes, and you will find that the origin of the trouble was the habit of drink. Men are learning that they must have non-drinking employes if they expect their business enterprises to prosper. It was not many years ago that drunkenness was tolerated in an employe if he were industrious and faithful; now it is not so. A man may possess a list of virtues as long as the moral law, but if he possesses not the one of sobriety, the list counts as nothing. Experience has taught business men that they cannot rely upon drinking men, and that to employ them leads to loss, to error, to vexations, delays and worries. Hence they will have none of them. They want sober men, or none.

This business discrimination against the liquor habit is bound to go on increasingly. As it is to-day, all the better class of positions can only be held by men of known sobriety. Hence it follows that the best peparation a man can make for his life work, if he expects to ever be more than a day-laborer, is to have the reputation of perfect sobriety, and to live up to that reputation.

Total abstinence is the best policy for any man who has to depend upon employment by other men, and he can do better by adhering strictly to it than by any other possible course. He may think that an occasional glass is not hurtful, but if the knowledge of that kind of indulgence reaches his employer's ear, he will have lost more than he can hope to regain in years. The employer himself may not be a temperance man; but if he is a shrewd, sharp business man, he will not allow a drinking man in his employ.

Young men, and men in the employ of others, should realize that, in the fullest sense, it pays to be entirely sober; yes, and to shun even the appearance of indulgence or of close intercourse with those who are addicted to the habit. It pays to be a total abstainer; and this argument grows more and more forcible every year.

It is this practical kind of temperance enforcement which is one of the educational agencies to accomplish the work which must be done in order to crush out the saloon. No one—not even a drinker—finds fault with a railway officials who discharges or refuses to employ drinking men. Every one knows that they are not reliable. The officials are not called "cranks," nor "visionaries," nor "temperance fanatics." Everybody realizes that it is a strict matter of business, involving dollars and cents.

Let the fact be once drilled into the masses that, no matter how excellent in every other respect a man may be, if he drinks he cannot have any employment above the grade of a common day laborer, and self-interest will lead men to wipe out the saloon and pulverize the rum power.

Nervous, Tired, Weak.

That most dreaded disease, typhoid pneumonia left me with a cough, sore throat, tired and nervous. I could not sleep nights. To add to my many troubles, last winter I had La Grippe. It seemed I would not live until spring. I tried
