Vivid Picture Of Arctic Given By Club Speaker

By RALPH CAMERON

The romance of tracing the water routes taken by canoes of the early explorers of Canada's northland was told last night by Eric Morse, Canadian Club lecturer who addressed the regular club meeting at The Charlottetown.

Noting that Canada had half of all the fresh water in the world he particularly urged it not be wasted by being diverted to the United States "for pollution." He added if court fines for water pollution were made steep enough those industries pouring their wastes into the country's streams would find economic uses for the wastes and then the United States would have enough pure water of its own.

Calling a canoe trip across Canada "a true holiday," he said this was due to man having so concentrated on comfort he had left himself little room for adventure and a canoe trip from Hudson's Bay to the Yukon put modern man in the same position as those early voyagers.

Mr. Morse spoke of the Arctic barren lands as a million square miles without trees; a challenging territory testing a man by pitting his intelligence and camping skills against a constant threat of disaster through carelessness. "A place where you get no second chance."

He described the several phases of the journey, made in month-long stages during the summers of three or four years. The shortness of the Arctic summer — mid-July to mid-August — in relation to water navigation made it necessary to plan each stage well in advance to prepare for all eventualities.

RUGGED BEAUTY

In telling of the trip he graphically noted the rugged beauty of the terrain passed, the difficulties of portaging or hauling the canoes upstream when crossing the Rockies through a 1,000-foot high pass, and recalling the historical significance of the work of the early explorers who had to make the journey with no maps to guide them or experience to teach them.

But of that far northland Mr. Morse was dubious of its possible future economic usage. He stated there were vast quantities of precious metals there but getting them out presented almost insuperable difficulties because of extremely high transportation costs. However, he said the true treasure of the north is its wilderness and water.

These were of particular value in the coming world of greater leisure for man. Already that leisure brought on by automation was exerting tremendous pressure, he said, remarking "our national parks are being devastated by traffic."

The northland would become far more familiar to more people as leisure time increases and said of it that the country is "rentless but rewarding." Rentless because it permits no mistakes, rewarding because of the things one may see — Muskox and caribou, wolves and an occasional grizzly, an explosion of color where short-stem flowers carpet the ground with gorgeously colored blooms. A place where there is tremendous visibility due to the exceptional clarity and lack of visual interference. A place where a compass is useless due to the nearness of the magnetic pole; but a place where the summer offers perpetual day "and the sun is always there to guide you."

LONG EXPERIENCE

It called for long years of experience in handling canoes in all types of water; where "sliding the rapids" becomes routine, but only after a careful look at them because "the expert canoeist is not noted for bravado."

Mr. Morse following his talk illustrated much of his various trips with slides depicting many phases of his life in the barren lands.

Retiring president Hon. F. Walter Hyndman introduced the special guests who included His Honour Lieutenant Governor W. J. MacDonald and his military aide Lieut. Col. Earle MacLeod, M.C.

Later in the evening the nominating committee presented the name of Alex Wilson for the office of president for the coming year and he was elected during the business period following the address of the guest speaker.

Driver Found At Blame In Double Road Death

A coroner's jury last night found Sidney Leabert Brooks, 24, New Glasgow responsible for his own death and the death of Mrs. Roger (Gloria Jean) Macdonald of Charlottetown, as the result of an auto accident at Alberry Plains on Sunday Oct. 10.

The jury based its findings on testimony concerning Mr. Brooks' pattern of driving prior to the accident and post mortem results concerning the alcohol content of Mr. Brooks' body.

The inquest was conducted by Dr. L. E. Prowse, provincial coroner, who called 11 witnesses to testify.

Dr. John Gillis, Eldon, testified on arrival at the scene that he examined Mrs. Macdonald and found that she had multiple head injuries and lacerations. The doctor stated that Mr. Brooks' death was caused by a fractured neck and a ruptured pulmonary artery.

Dr. Malcolm Putnam testified on examining Mrs. Macdonald at the Prince Edward Island Hospital that she had an intensive fracture on the left side of the skull. Mrs. Macdonald died at 3 a.m. on Monday, Oct. 11.

George Reginald Butler and Mrs. Butler of Winsloe stated that they had been driving through the Baldwin Road and were on their way back to Charlottetown. They said the car reportedly driven by Brooks pulled out from the side of the road where she was walking trying to scare her. Then it drove away.

Kenneth Roger MacDonald, the driver of the car which Mrs. Macdonald was in, was in the way back to Charlottetown from Montague when she saw in her rear view mirror a Volkswagen car. She testified that the Volkswagen car passed her and went up the hill on the wrong side of the road.

Norma Donley, Vernon River, testified that the car reportedly driven by Brooks pulled off onto the side of the road where she was walking trying to scare her. Then it drove away.

Raymond John Murphy garage man in Charlottetown testified that both vehicles in question were in good mechanical condition.

In giving its verdict, the jury stated "we consider that this accident underlines the advisability of installing seat belts in all modern vehicles."

Members of the jury were: John Adams Bond, Allie Byron Cutcliffe, John Coy, David Rogers, Eric MacDonald, Milton MacDonald, Everett MacEachern and Kenneth Ralph Duncan.

Premier Walter R. Shaw briefly outlined the industrial expansion which his government has promoted recently "all of which is thanks to resources set up by the Diefenbaker government in the form of the Atlantic Development Board. Eastern Lobstermen Want 400-Trap Limit

SOURIS — A resolution concerning the establishment of a trap limit for lobster fishermen was passed at a meeting of the Eastern Kings Fishermen's Association in Souris Regional High School Monday night.

The resolution was brought forth by a committee composed of a representative from each of the six ports surrounding and including Souris.

The resolution, passed unanimously, stated that the trap limit be established at 400 traps, single or double.

"Each fisherman" according to the resolution should have his traps marked or tagged on the center sill inside the trap and that his buoys be similarly marked. Each fisherman should have his traps available for count at a time so agreed upon and that there be no replacement of lobster traps throughout the season unless a major disaster by competent authority.

"A helper may not be issued a bona fide fisherman's license until he has served an apprenticeship period of four years, and that while a helper, his license should be marked 'helper's license'.

The resolution also specified that $10, be the cost of a fishing license which may not be issued for less than 200 traps.

A motion was passed to have a copy of this resolution sent to both the P.E.I. Fisheries Federation in Charlottetown and the federal department of fisheries in Ottawa.

Another motion was passed to support the Eastern Kings Board of Trade's resolution to have a National Park established in Eastern Kings area.

Eugene Gorman, provincial deputy minister of fisheries, recommended that the resolution passed at the P.E.I. Fisheries Federation meeting in Charlottetown recently, be considered. Mr. Gordon summarized the main points for the assembled fishermen.
