

MR. AND MRS. ROGER MACDONALD
Early Autumn Wedding Is Solemnized At St. Pius X

St. Pius X Church, Parkdale, P. E. I., was the scene of a recent wedding, when Patricia Joan McQuaid, Charlottetown, became the bride of Roger Alfred MacDonal, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace MacDonal, Rumbold, Maine, U. S. A. The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Andrew MacDonal, of St. Pius X Parish.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor-length gown of peau de soie with matching train and long lily-point sleeves. Her shoulder-length veil was held in place by a flower, trimmed with satin leaves and tear drop crystals. She carried a bouquet of deep red roses.

Lorraine McQuaid, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a floor-length dress in gold with matching head piece, and carried a bouquet of white carnations tinted with gold. The bridesmaids were Mrs. Brenda Jones, Karen MacInnis and Janet Larkin. Miss Larkin and Miss MacInnis wore pink floor-length gowns with matching head pieces, and carried white, pink tinted carnations. Mrs. Jones wore a blue floor-length gown with matching head piece and carried white carnations, tinted with blue.

Carol Gallant, niece of the bride was flower girl wearing a deep rose floor-length gown with matching bonnet. She carried a basket of white carnations, tinted with pink. Charles McQuaid, brother of the bride, was the ring bearer.

The best man was Michael Kezal of Boston, Mass and ushers were Lawrence Uizer, South Orange, N. J., Carlton Barry, Boston, and Lenny Strais, Charlottetown.

A reception was held at the Basileia Recreation Centre, Charlottetown.

MARY HAWORTH
Neurotic Divorcee Now Seeks More Guidance

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a divorcee, 23, with two children: a daughter, 4, and a son, 3. My husband and I parted two years ago. The divorce became final last week.

I have been living with my father, a widower. Mother died eight years ago. My brother, 25, unmarried, also lives here.

In February, 1965, I sought family service agency help. For about six months I had once-a-week individual therapy, followed by about nine months of group therapy.

I am overweight, self-conscious about it and lack the will power to stay on a diet. I have no social life and never date. I have many friendly acquaintances though I am not much of a friend to anyone. I can't seem to give of myself or express what I feel. And I do feel intensely at times.

Would I be solving anything by moving out of my father's house? On the one hand I think it might be a healthy goal on the other hand, I think the children need a man's influence.

Dad is confused and neurotic too; often strict, stern and seemingly unfeeling; also moody and inconsistent. I am afraid of displeasing him, though privately critical of him. He puts on a great show in company; people think he is wonderful but he shies away from close relationships.

He has been dating a widow over a year and they are in love but torture one another with quarrels, rifts and jealousies. I used to wonder if I stood in the way of their getting married, but after talking to him and discussing it in group therapy, I don't think so.

I see him intimidating my daughter while pampering my son; and the awful thing is, I do it too. I try to curb myself because I love her every bit as much as I love the boy.

Recently I quit an office job, resolved to find a better one. Now I am scared stiff to go job hunting, so afraid of failure that I won't even try. Tell me what kind of help to see and where to look.

K.P.

Dear K.P.: In your letter, here cut in half, you mention that the family service agency therapy group, having adjourned last June, is now reconvening. In fact it will have reconvened by the time this answer is published.

You also say, "But if it is anything like the group last year, it won't help much. The other women, most of them, were reluc-

ELLEN'S DIARY
A Smoky Autumn Haze Veils The Distant Hills

And here then was dawning another new day, with as it happened, a veil of October fog between ours and the house on the hill. It filled the cup of valley.

"Well, well," James said, a window said, evidently somewhat surprised at the sight. There was a silence. "It's a question," he continued, "whether or not there will be any fieldwork to day. Now, just a question, though," he added, "I've seen a morning such as this, this time of year, turn into a lovely day."

"Sunny and warm" we agreed.

"Any more word from Papa and Mama Starling?" Peter inquired with a twinkle, come by where we were spreading out pieces of wash. Hands in pockets, he strolled along the lawn close by, feet casually scuffing the leaves. Autumn's smoky haze was now veiling lightly the far hills. The sun was on its October course, every last glow-worm vanished. Indeed so delightful the day then was, lines we had read somewhere came to mind.

October beams with gentle peace.

As nature lets the force of summer cool.

The last smoke-wisps trail in a haze of balmy days;

The ash-leaf embers drift, as ashes must,

While nature weaves designs of life, on busy looms."

Smoke-wisps... haze. Last flowers blossoming, leaves drifting, withering. And yet despite the beautiful, though rather melancholy scene about, nature was weaving in tree and on field, designs promise of life in a season to come.

"There were only a few words on a card from the Papa," we grinned.

"And what did they say?"

"We have had a pleasant trip so far. We are now passing over that State where 'De cotton and de co'n an'aters grow' it said. And 'Wish you were here!'"

"Well," he reflected "if they were flying, how could he write?"

"Now how could he?" we queried.

And presently it was a perfect day for the fieldwork, carrying our farmers off to the baling of straw.

"Now then, all hands out - and the cook!" James called at the door in half-earnest when loads of bales came to the yard. Alex and his sister, and mother, were among today's helpers at the storing. Ideal the day was busy and enjoyable, full of life and living, though towards evening there came a change. She, who was home on the long weekend holiday, joined them with other students in that outward trek which returns them to the mainland and Universities again.

James stirs now in his armchair, and puts down his reading.

"The house seems quiet tonight, Ellen, doesn't it?"

"Yes, lonesome - like" we agree. "Ain't nobody heah but us an' dem' kittens!"

Until tomorrow - - - Diary - - - Goodnight.

newborn customers last year than five years ago.

The bottom hasn't quite fallen out of the diaper trade but the drying up of part of the market is causing some concern.

A problem is also posed for hospitals, some of which are overcrowded in all sections except obstetrics.

"Many of the smaller hospitals overbuilt for obstetrics, not anticipating the decline," says Dr. C. M. Hoffman, director of maternal health for Ontario.

"But we don't think other patients should be in the same ward. The danger of infection to susceptible babies is too great and we feel it is our job to shield the child."

Since 1960, despite an overall increase in population and rising marriage rate, Canada's birth rate has dropped from 26.8 to 21.4 births per 1,000 population. Market researchers predict the decline will continue to around 1969 or 1970 when the rate may hit 18.9.

Highfield UCV Holds Canvass For Church

The regular monthly meeting of the Highfield UCV was held recently at the home of Mrs. Florence Stevenson.

The meeting was chaired by the president, Mrs. Jane Thomson and was opened by all members repeating the UCV Purpose.

Mrs. Winnie Newman was in charge of the devotional period the theme of which was "God Cares For His Own". Psalm 23 was read in unison and the hymn "The Lord's My Shepherd" was sung with the pianist Mrs. Ada Frizzell at the piano.

10 members answered roll call with a verse from the Bible containing the word "Gathers".

A very satisfactory report was given by the members on the canvass from the congregation in place of holding our turkey supper.

Roll call for October meeting is to be answered by a verse from the Bible containing the word "temptation" and devotions will be in charge of Mrs. Florence Stevenson, and the study book, Mrs. Ada Frizzell.

The meeting closed by repeating the Lord's Prayer and refreshments were served by the hostesses assisted by Mrs. Joan Dunning and Mrs. Ruth Bell.
