He was born in Westmoreland, on February 1st, 1873, he was the son of the late David and Margaret Manning.

His sisters wish to express thanks to the officials of that Institution, the Doctor and Nurses, and especially the Matron, for kindness shown their brother while being an inmate in this home.

Reid the meeting adjourned and refreshments were served by Mrs. Alfred McNeill, Mrs. Wendell Barbour, Mrs. J. A. Haslam, Mrs. Alan MacMillan, and Mrs. Olive Stewart.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our Father,

JOHN R. HARDING who passed away February 6th, 1950.

Past his suffering, past his pain, Cease to weep, for tears are vain. He who suffered is at rest, Gone to Heaven with the best.

Ever Remembered by Robert and Leslie.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear sister Mrs. Patrick Sweeney, who departed this life January 30th, 1951.

The flowers we place upon your grave, Have withered and decayed, But the love for you who sleeps beneath, Will never fade away.

Sadly Missed by Sister Margaret, Mrs. Henry Clarkin, Peake's Station, P. E. I.

MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER

On Friday evening, January 4th, friends and neighbours from Sea View and surrounding districts gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanford Pickering in honor of their son and his bride, Mr. and Mrs. William Pickering.

To the strains of wedding music played by Mrs. Lorne Campbell, the bride and groom were escorted to their seats of honor by Mr. and Mrs. Leighton Coulson.

A gaily decorated basket, laden with gifts and envelopes, was carried in by Miss Doreen Adams and Master Lowell Coulson.

The groom on behalf of his bride fittingly replied thanking all for their valuable and useful gifts after which all joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." A delicious lunch was then served.

The remainder of the evening was spent in instrumental music with some of the younger folk dancing the old time dances.

At a late hour and after thanking their host and hostess for an enjoyable evening all departed to their homes wishing the newly weds much happiness in their journey through life together.

CHAPTER XI PART ONE

Mary Sue and Buzz sat still, watching the car drive off down to the road. And Buzz said grimly, the way he makes her step around as though he owned her body and soul—Ma' Sue, I don't think I like her very well!"

Catherine came to meet Celia as she got out of the car. She kissed her lightly on the cheek, murmuring, "Hold everything, pet. The inescapable as though she meant to spend the rest of her life here! I do hope when you and Win are married you can dislodge her—but I wouldn't count on it."

"So did we—but when we got to the station, she merely smiled sweetly, waved good-by to the Reads and hello to the new batch, and climbed back into the car with us to come back!" answered Catherine. "I thought Win was going to boot her out, but it seemed to amuse him. The darned things amuse that guy! And since they came back, they've been sniping at each other with all sorts of rude and insulting speeches. But here she is, and from the looks of her, here she intends to stay."

Win, who had been speaking to the chauffeur who had come to put the car away, came around the edge of the shrubbery then, and took Celia's hand in his and led her toward the house.

As they went up the steps and into the big, handsome living room, there came the sound of a staccato voice saying, "The hurricane is at present some distance off the coast, but the weather bureau advises that the outer perimeter of it will strike the coast somewhere near Cherry Point around midnight."

Win frowned and said, "Damn it, I knew I was wrong to let anybody bring a radio here! It completely destroys the peace and quiet that I wanted to protect."

"But if you hadn't had the radio," suggested Celia, "how would you have known that the hurricane would hit?"

"I could have borne not knowing," said Win. "And besides, I've been watching the barometer at the boathouse for the last day or two. I don't need a radio to tell me when the storm signals are all set!"

By now they had entered the living room, and the current batch of guests, whom Celia had met earlier in the day, smiled and greeted her pleasantly. One of the young men snapped off the radio and looked guilty as Win flung him an unfriendly glance. But dinner was announced, and in the ensuing movement and stir the young man managed to attach himself to Jennifer, glowing and lovely in pale yellow. Though the look she gave Celia, in lieu of a greeting, was jelly malevolent. She obviously held Celia completely guilty in the matter of her engagement. Apparently Jennifer did not accept the fact that Win had fallen in love with Celia; she behaved as though Celia had taken unfair advantage and set a trap for him.

The half-dozen or more house guests were determinedly gay and light-hearted, as though the impending threat of the storm were something to shrug off. Yet now and then, as the wind stirred in the trees outside, or they glanced toward windows inky black with the thick, low-hanging clouds obscuring the moon, there was a look of uneasiness in their eyes that each of them tried hard to veil.

Dinner was barely over when the rattle of a station wagon was heard in the drive, and Buzz and Mary Sue, followed by Rusty, Doc, Bugs and a bright-eyed excited Susan came in. Win greeted them with every evidence of pleasure. There were introductions, and Win's guests were polite and courteous, but gradually the formality wore off, as the outward evidences of the storm's approach became more apparent.

Shortly after ten the radio went off, and the lights went out. There were stifled gasps as the big room was plunged into darkness, but almost immediately candlelight began to flicker, and two or three kerosene oil lamps were placed about the big room.

Jennifer said suddenly, her voice strained, almost hysterical, "It's suffocating in here! Why can't we have some air?"

"Don't be an idiot, darling. All the windows and doors have to be closed and the storm shutters locked in place. That's what's politely called 'batening down.' As long as you keep a house tightly closed and shuttered, so that none of the wind can get in, you're safe—supposedly," said the young man with the radio.

"Yeah, that's right," contributed Bugs cheerfully. "In an earthquake you go quick and open the door; when it's a bombing raid, you open doors and windows both; but when it's a hurricane, you batten down."

Somebody said enviously, "you don't seem a bit concerned, Mr.—Mr.—"

"Just call me Bugs, lady—everybody does," said Bugs genially.

JUNIOR LADIES AID

The monthly meeting of the Junior Ladies Aid of the Prince Edward Island Hospital was held at the Cundall Home recently, with an attendance of 48 members.

The president, Mrs. J. K. L. Irwin, opened the meeting with the "Lord's Prayer" repeated in unison, after which the minutes of the previous meeting and two executive meetings were read and approved. The treasurer, Mrs. T. D. DeBois, reported a balance of $1,613.12.

Four new members, Mrs. Harold MacPherson, Mrs. J. T. Irwin, Mrs. A. McVicar, and Mrs. Peter Rogers were welcomed to the Aid. Corresponding secretary Mrs. Fred Large then read a letter from the Maritime Hospital Association and one from Miss Malr thanking the Aid for Christmas trees placed in hospital wards and on the lawn at Christmas.

The reports of the various committees were read, followed by discussions on the annual fashion show. It was decided by a standing vote to hold the show in the Prince Edward Theatre on March 24th, with shows at 7 and 9:15; the price of tickets $1.25.
