FOUL PLAY.

By Charles Roads.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Hazel hesitated, and then confessed that he had made a little experiment on himself before risking it upon her.

Helen looked up at him as he said this so simply and quietly. Her great eyes filled with an angelic light. Was it admiration? Was it thankfulness? Her bosom heaved, and her lips quivered. It was but a moment, and she felt glad that Hazel had turned away from her and saw nothing.

A long silence followed this little episode, when she was aroused from her reverie.

"Patter—patter—patter."
She looked up.

Their eyes met. It was therein, Hazel only smiled a little, and then ran down to the boat-house to see that all was right there, and then returned with a large bundle of chips, with which he made a fire, for the sky had darkened overhead. Gusts of wind ran along the water; it had become suddenly chilly. They had almost forgotten the feel of wet weather.

Ere the fire had kindled, the rain came down in torrents, and the matted roof being resonant, they heard it strike here and there above their heads.

Helen sat down on her little stool and reflected.

In that hut were two persons. One had forgot it, and feared it, and provided against it. The other had said petulantly it was a bugbear.

And now the rain was pattering and the prophet was on his knees making her as comfortable as he could in spite of all, and was not the man to remind her he had foretold it.

She pondered his character while she watched his movements. He put down his embers, then he took a cocooned out from the wall, cut it in slices with his knife, and made a fire, clear fire; then he ran out again, in spite of Helen's remonstrance, and brought a dozen large scales to the palm-trap.

It was all the more cheering for the dismal scene and the pattering of the rain on the resounding roof.

But thanks to Hazel's precaution, the hut proved weather-tight; of which fact having satisfied himself, he bade her good-night.
He was at the door when her voice recalled him.

"Mr. Hazel, I cannot rest this night without asking your pardon for all the unkind things I may have done and said, without thanking you humbly for your great forbearance and your respect for the unhappy—I mean the unfortunate girl thus cast upon your mercy."

She held out her hand; he took it between his own and faintly expressed his gratitude for her kindness; and so she sent him away brimful of happiness.

The rain was descending in torrents. She heard it, but he did not feel it; for she had spread her angel's wings over his existence, and he regained his sheltered boat-house he knew not how.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE next day was Sunday. Hazel had kept a calendar of the week, and every seventh day was laid aside with jealousy, to be devoted to such simple religious exercises as he could invent. The rain still continued, with less violence indeed, but without an hours' intermission. After breakfast he read to her the exodus of the Israelites, and their sufferings during that desert life. He compared those hardships with their own troubles, and pointed out to her how their condition presented many things to be thankful for. The island was fruitful, the climate healthy. They might have been cast away on a sandy key or reef, where they would have perished slowly and miserably of hunger and exposure. Then they were spared to each other. Had she been alone there, she could not have provided for herself; had he been cast away a solitary man, the island would have been to him an intolerable prison.

In all these reflections Hazel was guarded that no expression should escape him to arouse her apprehension. He was so careful of this that she observed his caution and watched his restraint. And Helen was thinking more of this than of the holy subject on which he was discoursing. The disguise he threw over his heart was penetrable to the girl's eye. She saw his love in every careful word, and employed her self in detecting it under his rigid manner.

Secure in her own position, she could examine his from the loopholes of her soul, and take a pleasure in witnessing the suppressed happiness she could bestow with a word. She did not wonder at her power.
The best of women have the natural vanity to take for granted the away they assume over the existence which submits to them.

A week passed thus, and Hazel blessed the rain that drove them to this sociability.
He had prepared the tide of a young seal which had drifted ashore dead. This membrane, dried in the sun, formed a piece of excellent parchment, and he desired to draw upon it a map of the island.

To accomplish this, the first thing was to obtain a good red ink from the cochineal, which is crimson. He did according to his means. He got one of the tin vessels, and filled it till he had obtained a considerable quantity of the metal. This he subjected for forty hours to the action of lime-juice. He then added a fine scarlet. In using it he added a small quantity of a hard and pure gum—he had found gum abandoned in the island. His pen was made from an osprey's feather, hundreds of which were strewn about the docks, and some of these he had already secured and dried.

Placing his tin baler before him, on which he had scratched his notes, he drew a map of the island.

"What shall we call it?" said he.

Helen paused, and then replied, "Call it GOSSEND ISLAND."

"So I will," he said, and wrote it down.

Then they named the places they had seen. The reef Helen had discovered off the northwest coast they called "White Water Island," because of the breakers.
Then came "Seal Bay," "Palm-tree Point," "Mount Look-out," (this was the hill due south of where they lived). They called the cove-brake "Wild Duck Swamp," and the spot where they lunched "Cochineal Clearing." The mountain was named "Mount Cavity."

"But what shall we call the capital of the kingdom—this hut?" said Miss Rolleston, as she leaned over him and pointed to the spot.

"St. Helen's," said Hazel, looking up; and he wrote it down ere she could object.

Then there was a little awkward pause, while he was busily occupied in filling up some topographical details. She turned it off easily.

"What are those caterpillars that you have drawn there sprawling over my kingdom?" she asked.

"Caterpillars! you are complimentary, Miss Rolleston. These are mountains."

"Oh, indeed; and these lines you are now drawing are rivers, I presume."

"Yes; it is all that branch of our solitary estuary, which runs westward, the River Lee, and this to the east the River Medway.
Is such your Majesty's pleasure?"

"La Reine! revid," replied Helen, smiling.

"But, Master Geographer, it seems to me that you are putting in mountains and rivers which you have never explored; how do you know that these turns at right angles in the stream exists as you present them? and these spurs, which look so real, have you not added them only to disguise the caterpillar character of your range of hills?"

Hazel laughed as he confessed to drawing on his fancy for some little details. But pleaded that all geographers, when they draw maps, were obliged to fill in a few such touches, where discovery had failed to supply particulars.

Helen had always believed religiously in maps, and was amused when she reflected on her former credulity.
