

Examination at St. Dunstan's College.

On the 8th inst., the annual Examination of the students of St. Dunstan's College, was held in the Hall of the College. Among those present, were His Lordship the Bishop, and his clergy, His honor Chief Justice Hodgson, the Hon. George Coles, the Hon. Col. Gray, His Worship the Mayor, and several other leading gentlemen and ladies.

Chief Justice Hodgson said: Allow me, my young friends, to say a few words to you, which I trust will have an impressive effect. You have just completed a course of studies which will be of no small advantage to you in your commercial or professional career, and you are a debt of gratitude to His Lordship the Bishop, for his untiring zeal and energy on your behalf.

country—Great Britain. Consider the prizes in store for you. I have noticed within the last six or seven years some wonderful results springing out of educational institutions. Men go from this Island and take their degrees with honor, receiving public appointments in Britain. Our young men are going to Ontario, and achieve most brilliant success. Within the field which is before you, there are great merits to be grasped. I don't mean to say you will all win a prize, but some of you will. Now is the time to work hard, and look to that day when you will take your position far in advance. We will take your position. We can't all be bishops or judges (laughter). There may be one judge or one bishop, or one general amongst you. If there are only two, "which one of them" say you "shall I be? I'll take care to be one." I am glad to meet you, and if the Lord spare me, I hope next year to meet you again. (Applause.)

His Lordship then addressed the children, said that after listening to the two beautiful and very appropriate discourses of the gentlemen who preceded him—Chief Justice Hodgson and the Hon. Col. Gray—it had become rather difficult on His Lordship to know what remarks to make. The students have a right to be exceedingly thankful to them for their presence, their past kindness and their observations, which showed them how much they had their improvement, not only in their studies, but in their hearts. As they had so many inducements held out to them to be great men, His Lordship would particularly draw their attention to their being also good men; and it is an essential qualification that they, to be good men, must be good boys. (Applause.) During the period they would be at home on vacation, their friends would be visiting with each other to show them marks of kindness. As their friend, Col. Gray, was laboring and completing them on their conduct, deportment, and scholastic acquirements, they should always bear in mind to put in practice those lessons they had learnt. "Be," said the venerable prelate, "what you ought to be—a model for your young friends and acquaintances." As they were on the eve of going home, His Lordship, on the part of all, would wish them good bye—looking after them as an old friend should after a juvenile one. At the end of the vacation, they would be expected to return, but those who did not, His Lordship would always entertain a hope that whatever position in life any one of them adopted, he would make his mark in it. (renewed applause.)
