MARY HAWORTH

Man Was Disillusioned By Girls' Confessions

Dear Mary Haworth: I am 20, come from a fairly wealthy family that spoiled me. At home I never had many dates, which may account for my present troubles. My mother and I are not close and it would really hurt her to know the truth about me.

At home I was going steady with Joe when I came here, two years ago, to take a job. He took up Army service six months later and we got engaged. After four months we broke off, because meantime I had met Bill and realized I wasn't ready to marry.

Bill dated me on weekends, staying with my four housemates and me. During the week I was dating other boys. After five months Bill left for sea duty and I promised to wait for him, but didn't. For a while there was John, a wonderful guy, but I gave him up when Joe returned last Christmas.

Still confused, I promised to do again to marry Joe. But in January I met Dick and broke with Joe. Dick didn't spoil me, used his head about things that others rush into, met my family, and I everything was going our way until I let sex take over.

Now Dick doesn't love, trust or understand me. Nor does he want to marry me. He says marriage won't work for us, not the way he feels. He says he loved an image of the girl he thought I was, he doesn't know if he could love me as I am.

In February when we first spoke of our past, he told the truth and I lied. I felt he couldn't then accept my past; but that later, when he loved me, it wouldn't matter. Finally, when most of the truth (not all) came out, he condoned some, but not all.

Because of my lies he vowed to break off, but was back to see me the next several nights. He tells me to date others and forget about him. But I love him with all my heart, want to be what he wants me to be; and when I try to explain he says, "Go tell your sob story to someone else."

He has taught me a lot: What love really is, how to show that you care, how he felt when I failed him. I hadn't known that virginity is so important. He says I won't wait while he is away (14 months at sea), as I never did for the others.

I realize my mistakes, but I pray God everything will turn out for the best, even if I have been a sinner; and I have faith that it will be going to keep my present troubles. Please advise me, G.G.

Dear G.G.: It is my opinion that your romance with Dick has "had a great fall," in the words of the nursery rhyme, and that all the King's horses and all the King's men can't put it back together again in good-as-new shape.

For the present, however, you may feel obliged to continue trading on the hope that the blasted dream can be renewed, simply because you haven't the character formation, as yet, to face up to the inevitable costs of appalling mistakes.

The positive side of the coin of your experience, to date, is that it has begun to bring home to you a priceless lesson, to wit: That as one sows, so shall he reap.

In a spirit of confusion, yes, but also with a heady sense of power, sex-wise, you were squandering yourself as a fool spends gold, until you encountered the granite resistance of Dick's refusal to play sex games on terms that you'd picked up.

Actually, whether the romance expires or continues to grope for survival, the fortunate fact is that Dick already has made potentially great contribution to your possible regeneration into a person of trustworthy caliber in relation to love.

He has more or less outlined for you, with anguished emphasis, what a self-respecting man expects of the woman he loves, namely, truth, honor, fidelity, integrity, stability, reserve, steadfastness — in brief, a nature dependable as a compass in a scheme of things.

So, your immediate assignment, as I see it, is to get first-hand specialist counselling help, analytic or pastoral, in pulling yourself together, to incorporate into your routine being, and doing all these "staying" qualities that Dick thought were yours, when he first was attracted to you.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Guardian.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Strikes Or No Strikes Farm Work Keeps On

"It will be a while yet before any of our grain is ready for the combine" James offered, pausing at the doorstep to look off along the fields, catching then the first gold of the sunshine, before he came in to breakfast this morning.

And beside the grainlands, the pasture and a stunted spruce in that fawny shade, which is a background for the crickets' doleful tunes.

Summer through, indeed commencing in the springtime, when crocuses brighten the damp of the border of lawn, and daffodils reflect the strengthening sunshine and tulips array themselves in pretty frocks, we breakfast within near sight of the flowerings. Each plant, each shrub and tree too, in turn contributes a share to our enjoyment as the morning comes and goes.

Now the dahlias surprise us with their strength of foliage and varied colorings, having come somewhat listless from the cellar at planting-time. And this morning the hollyhocks and great-faced sunflowers were being visited already by various wings in the quiet prevailing.

"Come September" we said, pouring our cups of tea, "we are likely to get high winds during the equinox."

"And there's little we can do about it Ellen! When we reaped with the binder we could cut the grain even a little on the green side, to have it safe in stock against winds and weathers. But now..."

"... it has to be well ripened to combine" we nodded.

Now the wind was moving down from the creek, stirring with its light breath the leaves of the lawn-trees. Sparrows flew by to breakfast in the ro-wan. A goldfinch set a flashing jewel of color in the green of an oak. Scampie barked. The mailman's car was coming down the road-hill, there where it dips to the stream.

"He's early this morning!" James remarked glancing at the clock.

"By a few minutes perhaps" we agreed.

"I see he won some ribbons with his horses at the Fair. He's a good hand with horses". James' smile was approving.

Ours, Paddy, and Millie's filly, and Sara's, had lifted heads to gaze inquiringly at the passing car. Now, doubtless having recognized it, they returned to their grazing, there on Mr. O's pasture on the far side of the stream, which run up gently and tree-crowned, to the horizon.

"This is the day the trains and Borden's ferries come to a halt, Ellen!" he recalled. "At noon" he added.

"Let's hope all the summer- guests who planned to get away home will not be disappointed this morning" we said.

"Well" he smiled presently, picking up his cap, "Strike or no strike and the Island will have two then to bother it, we'd better get on with our day!"

This evening's report on the field-work? There now remains "a comfortable day's sawing tomorrow."

Until tomorrow --- Diary --- Goodnight...

Quick-Do Egg Dishes Tasty And Nutritious

"The coffee-break is now the breakfast period," exclaimed an egg-dealer at a convention session of the Poultry and Egg National Board recently held in California. "Eggs are no longer the nation's favorite breakfast food."

Don't worry dear friends. I suggest that instead of trying to make Americans eat eggs for breakfast every day, we adopt the custom of preparing interesting quick-do egg dishes for lunch, dinner or supper when a quick entree is needed and there is time for leisurely enjoyment of the meal. There are dozens of tasty egg dishes that can be prepared with nutritional values and taste appeal equivalent to that of meat; they are budgetwise, too. For instance:

In most foreign countries omelets are used as a favorite food. While visiting in Spain I savored a true Spanish omelet. This was delicious — not the type of omelet which we call Spanish — and which is made with tomato sauce — but a round omelet served flat, containing chopped potatoes and onions, and often varied by other ingredients.

MEAT AND VEGETABLE FILLING

1-3 c. olive oil
1-3 c. fine-chopped sautéed onion
potatoes, chopped medium-fine
1 tsp. salt

SPANISH FRUIT CREAM

1/4 c. canned pineapple juice
1/4 c. single-strength orange juice
1/4 c. lemon juice
1/2 c. sugar or 1-3 c. liquid honey
2 eggs, separated
3 tbsp. Spanish sherry (optional)
1/4 c. heavy cream (whipped stiff)

THE CHEF SUGGESTS

For substantial whole entree sandwiches for picnic or motor lunches, follow the Spanish custom of putting slices of dark bread together with wedges of any Spanish omelet menu today; cooled, of course.
