Lack Of Height May End Career

By PAUL WESTBROOK LONDON (CP)—Eddie Hopkinson is a goalkeeper accused by his critics of literally not measuring up to international soccer standards. At five feet, 8 1/2 inches, he's the shortest goalie in the First Division of the English League.

Volcanologists Watch Rumbles

HONOLULU (AP)—Volcanologists kept their ears to the ground Sunday, alert for rumbles that might signal renewed activity by Kilauea Iki, the temperamental volcano on Hawaii Island. A week-long eruption viewed by an estimated 140,000 islanders and tourists abruptly fizzled out Saturday night after staging its most spectacular display.

Flaming lava spewed to a height of 1,350 feet over the giant crater earlier in the day; then the end came. The fountain of molten rock dropped to 800 feet, shot back up to 1,100 feet and then suddenly subsided to nothing more than a bubbling red spot in less than a minute. Sightseers who had gone to the scene by land, sea and air were disappointed. Airlines had expected a booming weekend business for special flights over the area, 200 miles southeast of here.

Lack of height didn't stop Hopkinson from jumping all the way from the fourth team to nail down the regular job with Bolton Wanderers Football League side four years ago.

Within two years, his sparkling play earned him a place in England's international side which he held for five matches until a disastrous afternoon in May, 1958 when Yugoslavia scored five goals against him.

He was replaced by Burnley's Colin McDonald, a six-footer, but got another chance when McDonald suffered a broken leg at the end of last season. Again England's selectors considered Hopkinson the best man available for the job.

When England and Hopkinson opened the international season against Wales, his every move was carefully studied by George Raynor, an exiled Englishman who coached Sweden to second place in the 1958 World Cup tournament.

Two weeks later, the Swedes came to Wembley Stadium and gave Hopkinson an afternoon that may have ended his international career.

Time after time, the tall Swedish forwards outjumped Hopkinson for high centres lobbed into the goalmouth by their teammates. England was beaten 3-2 and the goalkeeper was leaven by the Wembley crowd as he slipped and fumbled on the damp turf.

RUSSIAN CON MAN

LONDON (AP)—Moscow Radio Thursday warned its listeners to beware of a "miracle man," who roams eastern Russia preaching the Baptist faith and offering Bibles for sale to his converts. The man to look out for, the radio said, is a 50-year-old Estonian whose "unctuous sermonizing in a falsetto voice is a pleasure to hear."

This is not to say that the defenders are by any means helpless as a result. In fact, there are comparatively few hands where the handicap they suffer should prove fatal. It is only that a good defensive player has to work harder to make the lack of getting the most out of his cards than a good dummy player.

East won the spade lead with the king and returned the jack which everybody ducked. It no longer mattered what East played next. Declarer later took a club finesse, lost it, and made four notrump.

But suppose East had played the jack instead of the king on the first trick. South would pretty surely have won with the queen and gone down because, when East later got in with a club, the spade return would be taken by West with the ace to defeat the contract.

How can East know the jack is the right play? Why should he violate the rule. In this hand, of playing third hand high? There are clues to point the way. He knows that West, at best, has four high-card points. This is because East sees 20 points in plain sight and knows South has 16 at least. East's only hope, therefore, is to assume West has the ace of spades. Without it there is no chance.

Furthermore, by the Rule of Eleven, South can have only one card higher in spades than the seven which was led. East has to hope it is the queen, and should therefore deliberately allow declarer to gain a spade trick, so as to permit ultimate defeat of the contract.
