It's an ill wind that blows nobody good.

THE leading Dry Goods firms of the City are selling off at 20 and 30 per cent. discount (see advts.) Perhaps their profits warrant the reductions in price; perhaps not. Anyway, it's a good thing for the purchasers.

OUR ADVICE.

Don't buy any more Dry Goods than you need because they are cheap. Buy just what you would have bought if no reductions had been made. Then you will find that you have a good many dollars on hand that you did not expect to have. Now, bring those dollars over to our store and lay in a stock of

GOOD THINGS TO EAT.

(You can't live on Dry Goods.) Get a box of Raisins, a few pounds of Currants, 5 or 10 lbs. of Tea (or a half chest if you have a large family), a good supply of Sugar, Rice, Spices, a tin of Kerosene Oil, and such other Goods as you need. We have a

BIG STOCK,

WHICH WE WILL SELL
VERY LOW,

and the more you buy, the bigger the discount.

The stock consists of Seasonable and Fashionable Goods, which are all marked in plain figures, and at prices that are well known to be the lowest in the market.

THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XXI.

There was still a pause in the company, and Magnus Troil added, "It shall never be said that my kinsman sat in her lower unhalsed, as if she were some of the old mountain-giantesses, and all from faint heart. I will speak first myself; but the rhyme comes worse from my tongue than when I was a score of years younger.—Claud Halero, you must stand by me."
Hand in hand they approached the shrine of the supposed sibyl, and after a moment's consultation together, Halero thus expressed the query of his friend and patron. Now the Udaller, like many persons of consequence in Zetland, who, as Sir Robert Sibbald has testified for them, had begun thus early to apply both to commerce and navigation, was concerned to some extent in the whalingery of the season, and the bard had been directed to put into his halting verse an inquiry concerning its success.

CLAUD HALERO.
"Mother darksome, Mother dread—
Dweller on the Fitful-head,
Thou canst see what deeds are done
Under the never-setting sun,
Look through sleat, and look through frost,
Look to Greenland's caves and coast,
By the icebergs is a sail
Chasing of the warthy whale,
Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
Tell us, has the good saip sped?"

The jest seemed to turn to earnest, as all, bending their heads around, listened to the voice of Norna, who, without a moment's hesitation, answered from the recesses of the tent in which she was enclosed:

NORNA.
"The thought of the aged is ever on gear—
On his fishing, his furrow, his flock, and his steer;
But thrive may his fishing, flock, furrow and herd,
While the aged for anguish shall tear his gray beard."

There was a momentary pause, during which Triptolemus had time to whisper, "If ten whitely and as many warlocks were to swear it, I will never believe that a decent man will either fash his beard or himself about anything, so long as stock and crop goes as it should do."

But the voice from within the tent resumed its low monotonous tone of recitation, and, interrupting farther commentary, proceeded as follows:

NORNA.
"The ship, well-laden as bark need be,
Lies deep in the furrow of the Iceland sea;
The breeze from Zetland blows fair and soft,
And gaily the gullard is fluttering aloft;
Seven good fishes have spouten their last,
And their jaw-bones are hanging to yard and mast."

Two are for Lerwick, and two for Kirkwall—
And three for Burg-Westra, the choicest of all."
"Now the powers above look down and protect us!" said Bryce Snailsfoot; "for it is nair than woman's wit that has sped out that ferly. I saw them at North Ronaldshaw, that had seen the bark Olave of Lerwick, she answered them for seven fish, exact as Norna has telled us in her rhyme."

"Umph—seven fish exactly? and you heard it at North Ronaldshaw?" said Captain Cleveland, "and I suppose told it as a good piece of news when you came hither?"

"It never crossed my tongue, Captain," answered the pedlar; "I dinna believe I have mentioned the Olave's having made up her cargo to three folks since I crossed to Dunrossness."

Such was the Speech of Cleveland, addressed to Magnus Troil, and heard without any applause.
"Norna," he said, "his cousin," (an emphasis on the word,) "held no communication with Bryce Snailsfoot or his acquaintances. He did not pretend to explain how she came by her information; but he had always remarked that Scotsmen, and indeed strangers in general, when they came to Zetland, were ready to find reasons for things which remained sufficiently obscure to those whose ancestors had dwelt there for ages."

Captain Cleveland took the hint and bowed without attempting to defend his own scepticism.

"And now forward, my brave hearts," said the Udaller; "and may all have as good tidings as I have! Three whales cannot but yield—let me think how many hogsheds—"

There was an obvious reluctance on the part of the guests to be the next in consulting the oracle of the tent.

"Gude news are welcome to some folks, if they came frae the deil himself," said Mistress Baby Yellowley, addressing the Lady Glowrowrum,—"for a similarity of disposition in some respects had made a sort of intimacy betwixt them—"

"But I think my leddy, that this has o'er mickle of rank witchcraft in it to have the countenance of donec Christian folks like you and me, my leddy."

"There may be something in what you say, my dame," replied the good Lady Glowrowrum; "but we Hialthlanders are no just like other folks, and this woman, if she be a witch, being the Frowd's friend and near kinswoman, it will be ill taen if we heena our fortunes spae like a' the rest of them; and see my nieces may e'n step forward in their turn and use harm danc. They will hae time to repent, ye ken, in the course of nature, if there be ony thing wrang in it, Mistress Yellowley."

Alderman R. E. Elbeck, Kingston, Ont., says: "Tamarac Elixir" is the best medicine on earth for Coughs and Colds. In my own case it produced rapid and gratifying results. I caught a severe cold which it seemed impossible to break up, but continually became more thoroughly seated. Finally a hacking cough set in which troubled me day and night, causing soreness of the Lungs. Hearing your "Tamarac" highly recommended, I procured a bottle. The first dose eased the cough, and one bottle completely cured me. It is a splendid preparation, pleasant to the taste, and should be kept in every house.

Obituary.

Died, November 30th, 1887, of typhoid fever, in North Raynham, Mass., at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Henry E. Dean, George E. Smith, aged 25 years and 27 days. The deceased was the second son of Charles Smith, of New Glasgow, Lot 23, and left the Island one year ago last October. He was a quiet, inoffensive young man, and his sudden and untimely death has cast a deep gloom over this community. He leaves a father and mother, sisters and brothers, besides numerous relatives and friends to mourn their loss. He died happy, trusting in his Redeemer, respected and lamented by all who knew him.

"Tell mother I died trusting in Jesus;"
He who has all power here to save;
In the bright early morning of manhood
I step in the cold dreary grave.

"Tell mother I died trusting in Jesus;"
How my heart still clings to her now,
And I feel that the swellings of Jordan
Are pressing just over my brow.

"Tell mother I died trusting in Jesus;"
For He promised to save one like me;
And I lean on the arm of my Savior,
And soon from all pain I'll be free.

"Tell mother I died trusting in Jesus;"
Still I cling to the loved ones at home;
And I long for the home of my childhood,
And wonder that why did I roam.

"Tell mother I died trusting in Jesus;"
My race here below is now run;
My short life is ended, no more will I suffer,
All my work here on earth is now done.
New Glasgow, Dec. 7th, 1887.

Mr. Charles E. McIver, Teacher, son of John McIver, Esq., of Newton, Lot 26, died at his father's residence at that place on Nov. 27th, aged 18 years. The cause of death was bleeding at the lungs. The sudden demise of this young man will be a great shock to his many acquaintances and friends in almost every section of the Island. A school teacher by profession, the frequent change in his field of labor brought him of necessity in contact with strangers from whom his kindness and affability won lasting friendship and generous esteem, and by all of whom his untimely decease will be sincerely regretted.

Mr. McIver was a young man of exceptional talent, whose rapid advance in the profession he had adopted was well assured had it pleased Providence to further prolong his days; but the "fiat had gone forth," and bowing in humble submission to the Will of the Creator, this His faithful servant yielded up into His hands again that life of which he held so brief a tenure. May he rest in peace.
