SAFE SOOTHING SATISFYING

Originated by an Old Family Physician in 1810.

You can safely trust what time has indorsed for nearly a century.

There is not a medicine in use today which possesses the confidence of the public to so great an extent as Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. For more than eighty years it has stood upon its own intrinsic merit, while generation after generation have used it. The best evidence of its value is the fact that in the state where it originated the sale of it is steadily increasing.

Johnson's Anodyne Liniment

I. S. JOHNSON ESQ. My Dear Sir:—Fifty years ago this month, your father, Dr. Johnson, called at my store and left me some Johnson's Anodyne Liniment on sale. I have sold it ever since. I can most truly say that it has maintained its high standard and popularity from that time to this. JOHN B. RAND, North Waterford, Maine, Jan., 1891.

Any doctor will tell you that Professor Hare, of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, is one of the highest authorities in the world on the action of drugs. In his last work, speaking of the treatment of scrofula, he says:

"It is hardly necessary to state that cod-liver oil is the best remedy of all. The oil should be given in emulsion, so prepared as to be palatable."

He also says that the hypophosphites should be combined with the oil.

Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is precisely such a preparation.

A MAIDEN FAIR.

BY CHARLES GIBBON.

CHAPTER II.

The cottage stood on the high ground overlooking the Firth. It was a square comfortable-looking building of one story, built of brown stone and slated. The only piece of ornamentation about the building was a porch. It stood in a piece of ground which was also square and planted with things useful—vegetables, fruit-trees, and berry bushes. There were a few plots of flowers and some rose-bushes, but these things being merely beautiful were kept well within bounds. Nevertheless the place had a cozy appearance and was attractive on that account.

The captain had been brought up to regard utility as the first consideration in life; and the only bit of fancy he had permitted himself when the grounds were laid out, was to place an old anchor in the center of the patch of grass, called the green. This anchor had one of its points stuck firmly in the ground as if it were holding the whole place steady.

"That auld anchor, sir," the captain would say to any visitor, "saved the Mermaid once when she was being blown out of the roads by one of the clartiest storms I have ever been in. The Mermaid of that time was a bit cutter you maun ken. And when I sold the cutter and got the steamer I brought that anchor here and I'm proud o' it—rael proud—and so I named the house after it."

As soon as Ross passed through the gate, he halted, hesitating whether to go straight to the door or to cross the green toward the lass he saw amongst the berry-bushes busy gathering fruit. His heart's impulse had its way, and he went toward her.

As the gate closed behind him with a clang a frank sun-browned face looked up from amongst the bushes and recognized him with a pleasant smile. He thought that smile as bright as the sunshine itself.

"Glad to see you, Mr. Ross," she said in a rich cheery voice.

"Father has been expecting you, but there is somebody with him just now."

How cordially Bob Ross thanked that "somebody," and how earnestly he prayed that the "somebody" might stay long.

"I could not come so early as I was meaning to do, and I'm no exactly sorry."

"How is that?"

"You are here."

She looked as if she enjoyed, or at any rate did not dislike, this very direct compliment. She said banteringly:—

"I'll hae to take care of you, Mr. Ross."

"That's just what I would like you to do," he rejoined sincerely.

"Keek into the berry-bush and say what you see there," she replied, laughingly quoting an old play-rhyme of childhood.

"I'm doubting you would not let me tell you what I see."

"Oh, but I would, for I'm no the gowk!"

"I'm sure of that, for what I see is the bonniest lass in all the world!"

"Eh, Mr. Ross!" she cried, laughing again. "I'm thinking I had better go and tell father you are here."

That was a check, otherwise he might have found an opportunity to turn this banter to serious account. She was conscious of that and wished to avoid the possible turn the conversation might take—and he was aware of it.

But he tried to detain her by the assurance that he was in no hurry and would rather wait until the captain was quite free. With a smiling shake of the head, she took up her basket of fruit and went toward the house. A tall winsome figure, in neat simple dress; and as she crossed the green her rich fair hair glistened in the sunlight like gold.

The wistful lover, following, felt that there was no use in following, for such a prize could never be his—not because there was any inseparable gulf between their positions; but because she in herself appeared to be so much above him or any ordinary mortal. Alas, poor lover!

But Annie was a bright specimen of woman nature — kind and generous, bonny and brave. The man who won her would be fortunate indeed, for he would possess that greatest of all blessings, a faithful helpmate in all that concerns daily life—tender in his sorrow, blithe in his gladness, and patient of his errors.

All this and more Rose thought, and it rendered the possibility of her becoming the prize of James Cargill the more bitter. He tried to make allowances for his own feelings in regard to Annie and the influence they had upon his opinion of the man. But when all allowances was made he could not believe that Cargill was likely to make her or any woman happy.

The captain's daughter was as famous as the captain himself; for although she could play the "pianny," and was reported to be able to speak French "as well as the French themselves" (such a smattering of the language as any school-girl might possess would suffice for this report,) she was her father's clerk and purser, beside being his housekeeper. She accompanied him on all his voyages, and in the wildest storm was as cool as the oldest seaman on board.

When the Mermaid was in straits she would stand by her father's side—her sailor hat and the pea-jacket over her ordinary dress, giving her tall figure a somewhat manly appearance—ready to obey him in anything he might command.

And throughout this rough life she preserved the gentlest characteristics of womanhood. When at home in the cottage no stranger would have suspected that the quiet-looking lass with the merry smile was accustomed to such stern experiences.

The Mermaid was a small steamer which Duncan Murray had purchased at a bargain. Then, having sold his cutter, he employed the steamer to considerable advantage in carrying goods along the coast, or to wherever he might obtain a cargo. By this means he had made a good deal of money—a big fortune his friends considered it—some of which was prudently invested in house property.

He might have retired and lived comfortably on his income. But he would not do that; he only became more particular about his cargoes and about his rates of freight. Likewise, he would now employ a pilot more frequently than had been is custom, in order to give himself more ease on board.

Often he had been heard to declare with an emphatic oath that he would never part with the Mermaid or his daughter "as lang as they could haud thegither."

In spite of this well-known declaration there were men who would have been glad to make him forego his vow so far the lady was concerned; only, she seemed to be as much disposed to observe it as her father. At any rate, no one had yet obtained her favor, and there seemed no likelihood of that favor being easily

To herself there was the simple fact that her life was a happy one and there was no need of change. Even if one should appear possessed of that strange power which draws a maiden away from father, mother, and kindred to trust her whole life to him, she believed that she could resist it until her father said—"Go, and take my blessing with you."

"Here is Mr. Ross father," said Annie, as she entered the room, and added with some surprise—"Mr. Cargill has gone?"

"Ay; did you no see him?—he wanted to see you. . . . How are you, Bob? I'm wantin' you to come wi' us as far as Peterhead. Can you manage it?"

The captain was a burly little man with a very ruddy face—shrewd, sharp, and yet not ill-natured.

"When?" was the prompt query.

"Next week, on Tuesday maybe, but on Wednesday sure."

Ross looked at Annie—his eyes turned to her involuntarily, asking the question, was she going too? But she looked down at the table examining some forms which her father had thrust toward her whilst he was speaking.

"I'm no sure. But what should you need me for?—you know the roads better than me."

The captain's quick pale eyes looked up at him sharply, and he said good-naturedly:—

"I'm perfectly aware o' that, Bob, but next to myse' I think you ken them best."

"Thank you, captain."

"And as I am to have a friend wi' me, I dinna want to hae mair fash myse' nor is just necessary. That's the reason why I want you wi' us, though what you are sae particular about kenning for, I canna make out. What's wrang wi' ye?"

Gilchrist, Chief of Police and government Fishery overseer of his own case said:—'For ten years my distress increased until the doctor called it Diabetes. At times my suffering was intense, and medicine taken did no good. At last a friend assured me that Dodd's Kidney Pills would cure me. Caught in Her Own Trap

Mrs. Pringle had been married just six months, and would have been blissfully happy, but she was one of those women who never can let well enough alone. She was inclined to be jealous of Mr. Pringle and was filled with surmises that had no actual foundation. But she decided to get a trap for him and it never occurred to her that she might possibly fall into it herself.

One day when Mr. Pringle went home to dinner his wife handed him a note which she said had been left for him that morning. He opened it, and after scanning it hastily thrust it indifferently into his pocket.

"Anything important?" asked his wife in a tone, trembling with excitement.

"No-o. A business matter, that is all."

"You seemed pleased over it," suggested Mrs. Pringle.

Mr Pringle laughed. He also blushed. His wife detected evidences of conscious guilt in the fact that he did not offer to show her the letter. Yes, she thought she had him safely trapped and the knowledge made her utterly wretched.

Mr. Pringle read the note over again on his way to the office.

"Dear Sir—I have often seen and admired you from a distance and would be greatly pleased to make your acquaintance. Meet me this afternoon at 4 at the approach to Belle Isle Bridge. I will wear a blue dress and carry a bunch of pink roses."

"Admirer."

At the hour specified the woman in the blue dress was there. A man—who was not Mr. Pringle—walked up to her.

"I have your note," he began, but she turned on him like fury. "How dare you speak to me? I am here to meet my husband by appointment."

"I guess not. You are here to meet Mr. Pringle, who sent me to see what you—"

"Wretch! If you address another word to me I'll call for help."

"Excuse me, but if Mr. Pringle had expected to see his wife, I am sure he would have come."

Mrs. Pringle took a passing car and went home. She had changed her dress, and butter wouldn't have melted in her mouth when Mr. Pringle came in. She thinks she has proved her husband to be a model of rectitude, but she doesn't know that he spotted "Admirer" at the first glimpse of her disguised handwriting.—Detroit Free Press.

A MESSAGE TO MEN.

Proving that True Honesty and True Philantrophy Still Exist.

If any man who is weak, nervous and debilitated, or who is suffering from any of the various troubles resulting from youthful folly, excesses or overwork, will take heart and write to me, I will send him confidentially and free of charge the plan pursued by which I was completely restored to perfect health and manhood, after years of suffering from Nervous Debility, Loss of Vigor and Organic Weakness.

I have nothing to sell, and therefore want no money, but as I know through my own experience how to sympathize with such sufferers, I am glad to be able to assist any fellow-beings to a cure. I am well aware of the prevalence of quackery, for I myself was deceived and imposed upon until I nearly lost faith in mankind, but I rejoice to say that I am now perfectly well and happy once more and am desirous therefore to make this certain means of cure known to all. If you will write to me you can rely upon being cured and the proud satisfaction of having been of great service to one in need will be sufficient reward for my trouble. Absolute secrecy assured. Send 5c silver to cover postage and address Mr. Geo. G. Strong, North Rockwood, Mich. 135&w.
