HOME ORCHID GROWING, by Rebecca T. Northern; Van Nostrand; 286 pages; $8.25. Those who are watching the last blooms in the plot over which they perspired and persevered during the past summer now have something to occupy their minds until it is gun next spring. Never mind the price of the book — everything is high these days — and this volume can bring you ten times the return of the average three-dollar tome, be it detective or adventure or mushy romance. It is also written in a fascinating manner and the greenest amateur can understand every sentence, whether or not he will ever possess the proverbial "green thumb."

In years gone by no one dreamed that an orchid could be grown anywhere outside of the tropics. But growers have been digging and delving at the mystery for decades, and eager gardeners have shouted encouragement from the bedside. The result is that orchids may be grown in the home without too much difficulty, and if you are really ambitious you can make the beautiful blooms a paying hobby. The book tells you that orchids are like fingering prints, no two alike, that there are fifteen thousand different species, ranging from less than an inch in size to those with a spread of half a foot. One of the finer specimens has shown its possibilities in captivity by reaching a height of eighteen feet and pushing out fifty flower spikes at one time, each of which carried from fifty to seventy flowers. Don't try for such a specimen right off. Take your time by fooling around first with lesser beauties, and remember that you do not have space enough indoors for eighteen-foot sprigs.

Every phase of orchid growing is covered, from planting seeds to giving away the finished product to any queens you happen to know. Full color plates and line drawings help the reader visualize what he may have in his cellar before the snow is gone, and it is hard to imagine a more interesting hobby. Every step is explained in detail. Methods of growing orchids in the home as well as in the greenhouse, are given. The author grows her own and started from scratch with pots on the windowsill. Read her story, get started and show the world Nova Scotia orchids.

St. Veronica's Guild Annual Meeting

The eleventh annual meeting of the St. Veronica's Guild was held Monday night in the City Hospital Solarium, with an attendance of about thirty-five members.

The President, Mrs. G. Maddigan, reviewed the activities of the year; reporting on the home cooking booth, conducted by the Nurses Guild at the hospital Bazaar, she said that the total receipts for the four days was approximately four hundred and thirty eight dollars, an increase of over one hundred dollars from the previous year. The sincere thanks of the Guild is extended to the ladies of the city who sent such generous donations of home cooking.

The following officers were elected for 1950-51: President, Mrs. G. Maddigan (re-elected); Vice-Pres., Miss Eileen MacDonald; Secretary, Miss Kay Reid; Treasurer, Mrs. J. J. Callaghan (re-elected); Counsellors, Mrs. J. E. Corrigan, Misses Lillian McDonald, Bernice Haughey, Joyce Jay. Guest speaker at the meeting was Miss Margaret Butler, who gave a very excellent address on her recent trip to Europe. Miss Butler, who also visited Rome on a Holy Year tour, presented a very vivid description of the magnificent churches and other places of interest she visited while in the Holy City, and also told about their audience with the Holy Father.

An enjoyable musical program followed, with Miss Mary McInnis, student nurse, at the piano. Dainty refreshments were served by Mrs. W. MacDougall, Miss Anne Cameron, Teresa Trainor, Kay Reid and Noreen Noonan.

Home Teacher Arrives To Instruct PEI Blind

Miss Florence Evans, an accredited Home Teacher of the Maritime Division of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, arrived in Charlottetown last evening to spend the next few weeks in Prince Edward Island, to instruct any blind person in their homes in the art of knitting, sewing, braille reading and writing, leather work, typing, cooking, etc.

Six years ago, Miss Evans was a carefree, sighted youngster. Then, with shocking suddenness blindness came following an illness. For many months she was too discouraged to face her handicap. "Then I decided to quit sulking," she confesses, "and once I got over my resentment I began to realize that there was a good, useful and interesting life ahead of me. At Blind School I found out that the teaching career I had planned was possible after all. The wonderful thing about my blindness is that it has made my teaching so much more worthwhile; it enables me to help other blind people regain a healthy, useful outlook on life. Because I have been rehabilitated, I can show them the way."

Normal Life

With timely and thorough teaching, though most of them make good adjustments, learn new skills and re-learn most of the old ones. Young people can be difficult too, but once they apply themselves, learn fast. The object of the teaching is to enable the blind person to live as nearly as possible a normal life and to retain his or her place in the community. "You'd be surprised," Miss Evans says, "how often the blind person's family is harder to educate than the person most affected. Sighted folks are too apt to coddle and wait on us instead of fostering our independence. Teaching hours are suited to the pupil's convenience. A woman with a family, for instance, takes her instruction in the evenings. How fast our pupils learn to read Braille or Moon, perform their usual daily tasks, get

Scroll Of Friendship And Log Book Being Flown To Province

All Prince Edward Island Girl Guides, Brownies, Guides, Commissioners, and in fact all persons interested in youth training will be given an opportunity to see the Scroll of Friendship and Log Book given by the Guides of Great Britain to the Guides of Canada when it is flown here in November for a brief stay on its Dominion-wide flight.

The Scroll of Friendship and Log Book was handed to our Dominion Chief Commissioner, Mrs. E. E. S. Wishart, by Princess Margaret who requested that it be sent across Canada so that as many Guides as possible, as well as others interested, might see it. As a symbol of the world-wide aspect of the Girl Guide movement, the gift will begin its tour in Newfoundland and travel west.

During the trip from the Isle of Wight, for that is where it was made, to Oxford, the Scroll was in safe keeping overnight in city halls, churches, schools, etc. The little dog-eared book accompanying the Scroll contains the names of those Guides and personages through whose hands it passed, and a similar one is now being made so that there may be sent back to England a record of how it passed through Canada.

The Scroll will arrive in Charlottetown at approximately 4.30 P.M. Monday, November 13th. It will be flown to Charlottetown by Maritime Central Airways, and plans are being formulated regarding its reception by members of the Guide family. It will remain on the island until the following Saturday, and during that time it is hoped every member of the Girl Guide Movement will have an opportunity of seeing it either in Charlottetown, Summerside, Montague, or wherever it may be during that week. As and when available, more information will be given the public so that all may see this outstanding gift to Canadian Girl Guides.

Business Spot

(By Forbes Rhude, Canadian Press Business Editor)

The things that are not said at a convention are sometimes more significant than the things that are said. This is by way of adding to recent discussions in this column about the value of annual conventions of national organizations. To illustrate the "things that are not said" idea:

In 1947 there was considerable expectancy that a post-war recession or depression might be expected, following a historic pattern.

As part of an effort to see what ground there was for this thought, this writer attended a number of national conventions to see just how worried business men were, and what they were about. He expected to hear a considerable "viewing with alarm," but it was quickly apparent that "viewing with alarm" got little attention. There were, it is true, warnings that competition was returning, that salesmen could no longer be just "order takers." And merchants and industrialists were cautioned to watch their inventories and not get caught with large quantities of goods on hand in case of a price drop.

But in the main, rather than worrying about where they could sell goods delegates were worrying about where they could buy them. As long as this situation existed the lesson from conventions seemed to be that no depression was in the offing and that seemed a lesson worth learning. So this writer still goes to key conventions, finds it about the only way aside from cross-country travelling to keep in touch with a broad range of opinion, and still pays as much or more attention to what people are not worrying about as to what they are worrying about.

Of course one has to use whatever judgment one has in deciding how much the things being worried about are relatively temporary about the neighbourhood and so on, depends greatly on themselves. Once blind people discover what they can do in spite of their handicap, there isn't much that can stop them. This is a fact that we are very proud of," declares Miss Evans.

Factors were basic and over-riding all others in sight, and virtually ruled out a depression for a time at least. Chief basic factors which have developed since, are the cold war, which virtually forbade that an economic collapse be allowed in the West; and the defence programs which have been launched as a result of the international tensions. The things mentioned have been over-riding to date, and appear likely to continue over-riding for some time. A factor which would over-ride them, which would make the demand effective.
